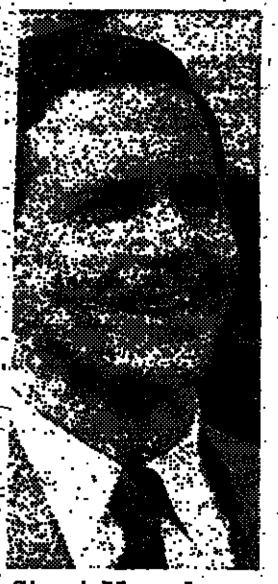
..agruder Seen ..eady to Expose ..atergate 'Ring'

..HINGTON, May 25 (IHT).—Former White House aide Jeb ..agruder was reported today to have agreed to implicate ..mer senior officials in the Watergate scandal.

..agruder was identified by government sources as the "key ..of the conspiracy" said by U.S. Attorney Harold H. Titus ..day to have agreed to plead guilty and testify as a prosecu..ess.

..agruder, who was second in command of President Nixon's re-election campaign committee last year, could play a major role in unraveling the mysteries of last June's bugging of Democratic party headquarters in the Watergate office complex and the political cover-up that followed, the sources said.



Stuart Magruder

They said that Mr. Magruder was ready to "name names"—some of them well known.

Mr. Magruder was quoted by a radio reporter last month as having said—after visiting his lawyer—that he expected to receive a nine-month prison sentence.

Today, a source close to the inaugural committee, which arranged last January's ceremonies marking the start of Mr. Nixon's second White House term, said that Mr. Magruder has been restored to the committee payroll.

According to a Washington Post source close to the prosecution, the "massive obstruction" that followed the Watergate arrests involved at least 15 to 20 persons who were not among the seven Watergate conspirators tried in January.

Although there is sufficient evidence to indict virtually all of those 15 to 20 persons, according to the source, only six to 10 probably will be charged criminally in the "comprehensive indictment" mentioned by Mr. Titus yesterday.

Mr. Titus said that he and his prosecutors had intended to withdraw from the Watergate case, but changed their minds after meeting Wednesday afternoon with Archibald Cox, the newly named special Watergate prosecutor. Mr. Titus said: "He urged . . . that we carry on the development of the case."

Shortly after Mr. Titus's statement, Mr. Cox sent him a letter saying he would "expect to be consulted before any decisions are made." Mr. Cox said he was familiarizing himself with the case and that at a later date "we can see what is most appropriate for the future."

In other developments:

● The latest Gallup poll, published today, said that a nationwide survey shortly after Mr. Nixon's televised Watergate speech of April 30—when he announced the resignation of two top White House aides and of his attorney general and the forced resignation of his White House legal counsel—gave him an approval rating by 45 percent, compared with his peak popularity of 68 percent immediately after the Vietnam cease-fire agreement in late January.

● Senate minority leader Hugh Scott, R., Pa., said that foreign governments and people abroad believe the U.S. government "is going to the dogs" as a result of Watergate, "and that just isn't so."

He said that one result of Watergate is that President Nixon now is more accessible to congressional leaders: He himself used to have trouble getting through Mr. Nixon's staff, but now the White House contacts him.

● Alfred C. Baldwin, the former FBI agent who monitored the wiretaps of conversations at Democratic headquarters in the Watergate, told the special Senate investigating committee what he saw on the night when the burglars were arrested last June. But he refused to disclose what he had overheard in more than Argentina's new President, Hector Campora, reading oath during swearing-in ceremony.

Campora Takes Office in Argentina

By Jonathan Kandell

BUENOS AIRES, May 25 (NYT).—Hector J. Campora, a loyal follower of former president and dictator Juan Peron, was inaugurated today as the president of a popularly elected government, ending seven years of military rule in Argentina.

Hundreds of thousands of Peronists marched and sang through the streets to celebrate the return to power of their movement, which had been banned for 17 years after the overthrow of Mr. Peron in 1955 by military coup.

Despite the generally festive atmosphere, at least one person was killed and seven wounded when police fired on demonstrators who had thrown rocks at an automobile carrying an admiral, who was a member of the outgoing military regime. Eight vehicles were also set afire.

The army general who handed him the presidential baton was President Alejandro A. Lanusse, commander-in-chief of the armed forces and a prisoner for four years during the first Peronist era.

More than 60 foreign delegations were on hand for the inauguration—including U.S. Secretary of State William Rogers, Chilean President Salvador Allende and Cuban President Osvaldo Dorticos.

Earlier, in a three-hour inauguration speech before Congress, Mr. Campora enunciated a nationalist and moderately leftist program for his four years in office, calling for a revitalization of the country's economy, public health, welfare and educational projects, economic benefits for workers, and relations with "all countries in the world."

The new president said Argentina's economy had fallen into the hands of foreigners. He said the foreign debt had grown under conservative military rule to $7 billion, more than three times Argentina's annual export income, AP reported.

[He declared that the new government will nationalize bank deposits and put credit to the use of "popular interests." He added that the exportation of grain and beef, the country's chief sources of income, will be controlled by the state.]

He thoroughly defended the performance of the first Peronist era, frequently quoted the words of Mr. Peron, and pledged his loyalty to the aging leader.

But his speech was mostly conciliatory, calling for a widespread "political and social truce."

Mr. Campora received his greatest applause when he evoked the memory of the late Eva Duarte, Mr. Peron's wife during most of his term in power.

The president also set out his intentions to revive the Eva Peron Foundation—the institution that she used to dispense charity to the needy and which opponents charged was graft-ridden. Mr. Campora said the revived institution would be run by Mr. Peron's third wife, Isabel.

Mr. Peron, 77, was not on hand for the ceremonies, because, he explained, he did not want to distract attention from the inauguration of Mr. Campora.

Mr. Peron has said he would return to Argentina next month, but has not indicated whether he would stay. Because of the role being assigned to his wife and the appointment of his personal secretary, José López Rega, to the new cabinet, some political observers now feel that Mr. Peron will once again set up permanent residence in Argentina and assume a dominant role in the new government.

Greek Destroyer's Captain, Crew 'Revolt' Against Athens

ROME, May 26 (AP).—The commander and crew of a Greek destroyer which anchored off the Italian coast near Rome tonight have rebelled against the Greek government, an officer of the ship said.

The destroyer Velos, with a crew of 270, had been taking part in NATO maneuvers in the eastern Mediterranean with ships of the United States, Britain, Italy and Turkey.

Capt. Nicholas Pappas said that he had informed NATO authorities of his decision to leave the maneuver. He pledged to "fight to re-establish democracy in Greece."

The officer acting as spokesman said that the captain and the crew had not decided yet what their immediate plans would be.

Unanimous Decision

He said that following the abortive coup d'etat led by retired navy officers in Athens Wednesday night, the commander and the crew decided unanimously to leave the maneuvers.

"After what happened in Greece we have decided not to go home, not to obey the Greek government," the officer said. "We have pledged to seek freedom for our country."

In Athens, a navy source said: "We expected it." The source said the Velos was the only Greek Navy unit presently out of its home port.

Unconfirmed reports in Athens said that 72 navy officers have been arrested since the coup attempt.

Seeks to End Justice Department 'Sleaziness'

Mr. Richardson, the outgoing secretary of defense, has also served President Nixon as under secretary in the State Department and secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

He said yesterday at a news conference that he would seek to reverse a trend of "sleaziness" in the Justice Department.

Asked how the Watergate affair has affected the public view of law enforcement in America, Mr. Richardson said, "A kind of sleaziness has infected the ways in which things have been done."

That, in turn, he said, "has touched agencies that have been concerned with law and law enforcement, almost inevitably as part of government."

Mr. Richardson is the third attorney general in little more than a year.

Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell has been indicted for alleged improprieties in handling a $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's re-election committee. He pleaded not guilty. Richard G. Kleindienst quit because of ties to Mr. Mitchell and others under investigation in the Watergate scandal.

Aside from national security interests, wiretaps should not be used in the United States, Mr. Richardson said. "They really have no application or justification within the United States to domestic matters," he said.

Later, Archibald Cox took an oath as special prosecutor in the Watergate case and pledged to use the assignment to restore public confidence in the government.

"I have been given all the power and independence any man could wish to perform the task that has been given to me," the Harvard professor said.

First Repair Try Fails

Skylab-1 Astronauts Reach Craft in Orbit

From Wire Dispatches

HOUSTON, May 25.—The Skylab astronauts reached their crippled space station in orbit today and tried, but failed to restore electric power to the spacecraft by poking a partly open solar panel into position.

The first major repair job attempted in space failed because Comdr. Paul Weitz, standing in the open hatch of the Apollo space capsule, was unable to bend back a small piece of aluminum debris retaining a wing of solar cells on the side of Skylab.

The three astronauts, Comdr. Weitz, Capt. Charles Conrad and Lt. Comdr. Joseph Kerwin, rendezvoused with the orbiting spacecraft seven hours and 45 minutes after a flawless blastoff from Cape Kennedy today.

They made an inspection fly-around which took them to within five feet of Skylab and reported one of the ship's solar panels partly open and the other missing.

"Solar wing is partially deployed," the mission commander of the three, Capt. Conrad, said. "There's a bulge of meteoroid shield underneath it in the middle, and it looks to be holding it down. I think we can take care of that."

All that is left of the other panel is "some tubes and wiring sticking out," he added.

Skylab lost its vital heat-shield blanket, which fouled one solar panel and is believed to have wrenched off the other shortly after blastoff May 14.

Capt. Conrad and his crewmate were launched aboard an Apollo spacecraft loaded with tools and materials necessary for repairs that could save America's $2.6 billion space laboratory program.

"Supergood!" cried Capt. Conrad minutes after today's blastoff which ended 10 days of intense training and preparation for their unprecedented mission.

"We fix anything," the spacecraft commander boasted as his ship soared away from Cape Kennedy.

After inspecting the space station from his command ship, Capt. Conrad will decide which of three techniques he and his crewmates will use tomorrow morning to place a heat shield on the space station.

The fate of the $294 million orbiting laboratory, the essential element in America's new space program, depends on how well the astronauts perform the patch job.

If they are successful, the crew will move into the space station and live aboard for 28 days. The repair also will make possible the 56-day missions later this year of Skylabs-2 and 3.

Nine astronauts on the three Skylab crews will conduct extensive medical, scientific, earth resources and space manufacturing experiments to determine how well man can function in space for long periods.

What they learn will be used to set guidelines for long missions of the future, such as permanent space stations or journeys to other planets.

The information also may have far-reaching consequences in bringing benefits from space to mankind, especially in the survey of earth's natural resources.

Emphasis on the first mission will be on medical studies, with Comd. Kerwin, the first U.S. physician launched in space, expected to carry a heavy burden. He has a medical lab on board to check the effect of weightlessness on man. He'll draw blood

Turnout Light; Syria Extends Voting One Day

DAMASCUS, May 25 (AP).—Syria extended voting through tomorrow after less than half the 3.3 million eligible voters cast ballots today in the nation's first parliamentary election in 11 years.

Although disappointed, government officials refused to describe the light turnout as a defeat for the ruling Arab Socialist Baath party.

A Ministry of Information spokesman said, "There is nothing unusual in continuing the voting on Saturday. It gives the people more time."

An Unidentified 'Blob' Flourishes, Defies Destruction in Dallas

DALLAS, May 25 (Reuters).—Marie Harris has got a "blob" in her garden and cannot do anything about it.

She discovered the blob when she looked out of her bedroom window one morning. "It was white and foamy-looking—about the size of an oatmeal cookie," she said. "But that was two weeks ago. It has now grown to the size of 16 oatmeal cookies and cannot be destroyed."

Efforts to identify and destroy the blob have failed. "I sliced the thing with a garden hoe and it was blackish mucus inside," she said.

"Taking it for a fungus of some kind, I cut it up and spread it out. Two mornings later it had returned—twice as big this time," she said.

Mrs. Harris said her husband then tried to destroy the blob. "Then last Saturday, there it was again . . . this time the inside was orange."

On Monday, the blob appeared again, "big as a platter—foamy and creamy and pale yellow." Mrs. Harris sprayed it with a nicotine-based mixture and "it appeared to be bleeding red and purple fluids."

The spray appears to be restraining the blob, but it has not gone away.

Bonn's East Germany Treaty Is Approved by Upper House

BONN, May 25.—The Bundesrat, or upper house of the West German parliament, today approved Chancellor Willy Brandt's normalization treaty with East Germany, but opposition Christian Democrats pressed a last-ditch move to have the pact declared unconstitutional.

The Bundesrat—representing 10 West German states and West Berlin—also approved a law which would authorize the West German government to apply for membership in the United Nations, along with East Germany.

President Gustav Heinemann will delay signing the treaty with East Germany until the Constitutional Court in Karlsruhe has had a chance to study a complaint by the state of Bavaria alleging that the pact violates the constitutional prerogative to work for reunification, a spokesman said.

Court Action on Monday

The court scheduled preliminary consideration of Bavaria's charge for Monday.

If the court issues the injunction on Monday, the Bavarian government will ask the court to make a final ruling that the treaty is illegal under a constitutional clause calling on the Bonn government to preserve the national identity of divided Germany and seek its reunification.

The Bundestag, lower house of parliament, approved the treaty with East Germany a week ago. Voting in the upper house was by a show of hands on a Bavarian motion to send the treaty back to a joint committee of the two chambers.

Only Bavaria, governed by Christian Democrats, who are in opposition at the national level, supported the delaying motion. Four other states also governed by Christian Democrats abstained. The six states governed by Mr. Brandt's Social Democrats voted against the Bavarian motion. No one demanded a vote on the treaty itself after that procedural issue was resolved, so the chair declared the treaty approved.

Mr. Brandt's government maintains the treaty does not recognize East Germany as a foreign state and leaves open possible reunification. Mr. Brandt told the upper house today that his government awaits the constitutional court ruling "with tranquility."

He added that the treaty will create the necessary preconditions so that Germans can become reconciled with each other "despite the separation of states."

Triple Setback For U.K. Tories In 2 By-Elections

LONDON, May 25 (Reuters).—The opposition Labor party increased its majorities in retaining two parliamentary constituencies which had by-elections yesterday.

In one district, industrial West Bromwich, in central England, a surprisingly strong showing by Martin Webster, an extremist candidate who campaigned against colored immigration, indicated that the ruling Conservative party may face new challenges on its stand in immigrant areas.

Mr. Webster, of the rightist National Front party, got 4,789 votes—16 percent of the turnout—in a constituency which has some 8,000 colored voters, mostly Asians.

Both that election and the one in Westhoughton in northwest England provided the first test of the government's public standing since sex-scandal revelations led to the resignations this week of two Tory aides, Lord Lambton and Earl Jellicoe.

At West Bromwich, Betty Boothroyd got 15,907 votes in winning for Labor—8,325 more than her nearest Tory challenger. The turnout there was small. In Westhoughton, Roger Stott won a 7,783 majority in a bigger turnout. Both results improved Labor's showing over the majorities it won in the 1970 general election.

White House Rejected CIA Report Radicals Not Funded From Abroad

By Seymour M. Hersh

WASHINGTON, May 25 (NYT).—The CIA reported in 1969 and 1970 that it could find no substantial evidence to support the Nixon administration's view that foreign governments were supplying undercover agents and funds to radicals and Black Panther groups in the United States, White House and intelligence sources said yesterday.

The CIA's findings were rejected, the sources said, by high-level White House aides who arranged in late 1970 for some 35 FBI agents to open overseas intelligence posts in 20 countries. The bureau's expansion is said to have angered Richard Helms, then the CIA director, and other agency officials.

"We tried to show that the radical movements were home-grown, indigenous responses to perceived grievances and problems that had been growing for years," one official who worked on the agency's analyses recalled. "We said the radicals were clean and that we couldn't find anything. But all it turned out to be was another nail in Helms's coffin."

Mr. Helms was relieved as the agency's director late last year.

The CIA said it would not comment on its 1969 and 1970 reports. One former White House official who worked on security matters in 1970 acknowledged that the agency's reports on student unrest had been available. But he added, "it was never our position that we had hard information" about the foreign link to domestic disturbances.

The intelligence sources said that the first CIA study was submitted to the office of Henry A. Kissinger, the President's national security adviser, more than six months after Mr. Nixon ordered the establishment of a special inter-agency committee to prepare recommendations for expanded domestic intelligence operations.

The New York Times reported yesterday that the committee's report, approved by Mr. Nixon and his top intelligence advisers in July, 1970, called for the FBI to mount a huge counter-insurgency program, involving spying, wiretapping and burglaries, against the Black Panthers, potential Arab saboteurs, radical students and Soviet espionage agents.

The program was not put into effect because the late J. Edgar Hoover, then FBI director, refused to act without written authorization from Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Nixon, in discussing the proposal during his Watergate statement Tuesday, cited what he said was a wave of domestic bombings, campus disturbances and gun battles in early 1970, and added: "Some of the disruptive activities were receiving foreign support." He cited no evidence.

Elsewhere in his statement, Mr. Nixon characterized the 1970 report as one of "three important national security operations" that had become involved in the Watergate scandal. The two other programs, he said, were the series of telephone wiretaps on newsmen and White House aides instituted in 1969 and the establishment of a special investigation unit in 1971 in connection with the Pentagon papers leak.

One intelligence official said that the White House had a "preoccupation" with the extent of foreign influence on domestic radicals and blacks. "Whenever kids went abroad," the source said, "there were those in the White House who were convinced that they were meeting with Communists and coming back with dope."

The CIA studied three distinct areas in both 1969 and 1970, the source said. It analyzed student patterns throughout Europe, North Africa and Latin America to determine whether there was any connection between activities there and the United States' disturbances. No significant connection was found, he said.

Another main area of study was in the Mideast, where nations—especially Egypt—were analyzed to determine whether the Arab student population in the United States was being drawn into radical activities under the leadership of the Arab bloc.

"For years there had been indications," the source said, "that there were Arab students in the United States who were probably financed by [Mideast] embassy money who were trying to draw support against Israel. To our knowledge there were no serious efforts beyond that. By that I mean there were no illegal activities by those students—no recruiting of American spies and no bomb-throwing."

The third main study area concerned possible Algerian support for the Black Panthers, the source said. "That question was tracked back and forth 16 times over and over again," he noted. "Every intelligence agency said we know it's an interesting hypothesis but, by and large, the judgment of the intelligence community in 1970 was that there was no significant Algerian support for the domestic operations of blacks."

"History supports that judgment completely," the official declared.

He noted that the Algerian government apparently fell out with the Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver and his followers late last year.

Both CIA reports, which are still classified, the sources said, attempted to put the protest activities of blacks and students into a sociological context, the source said. "We thought that it was absolutely imperative that the causes of what was happening—the Vietnam war and racial injustice—had to be understood."

200 monitored conversations, saying federal law forbids such disclosures. The committee then recessed its hearings until June 5.

● Federal prosecutors met today with California lawyer Herbert W. Kalmbach, who has been the President's personal attorney on the West Coast and who recently admitted to government auditors that he raised at least $210,000 for the Watergate defendants tried in January and their lawyers. One defendant has said this was "hush money" to buy his silence about Watergate.

U.S. Networks Split Coverage Of Watergate

NEW YORK, May 25 (AP).—The three major networks announced today that for the first time in television history they will rotate live coverage of a major news event—the Watergate hearings.

Executives drew lots and, following the result, NBC will carry the Senate hearings live when they resume on June 5, CBS on June 6, and ABC on June 7. The new plan means that one channel will be carrying Watergate while the other two will have their regular programs.

Network officials stressed that the rotation system did not preclude either or both of the other networks' broadcasting the hearings on a day when it is not their scheduled assignment.

"You can be sure we'll all be on when [former Attorney General John N.] Mitchell testifies," one official said.

The networks have been besieged by protests from viewers—mostly women at home—saying they have been deprived of their favorite daytime soap operas and game shows.

Some women have said that regularly scheduled programs, pre-empted for live coverage of the Senate hearings, kept them company while doing housework, but that Watergate was no company at all.

Morton Confirms Nixon Fund Aided Mills, Apparent Suicide

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP).—Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton said yesterday that he arranged a $25,000 contribution in 1971 to the campaign of Rep. William O. Mills, R., Md., who was found shot to death in his home in an apparent suicide earlier yesterday.

The funds were from the Committee for the Re-Election of the President, Mr. Morton said in an interview. Rep. Mills of Easton, Md., had worked for Mr. Morton when Mr. Morton was a congressman.

The secretary said that he arranged the contribution through John N. Mitchell, who was then the U.S. attorney general.

Mr. Morton said that it would be "tragic" if anyone jumped to the conclusion that Rep. Mills's death had some connection with the Watergate political scandal.

"What happened to this poor guy has nothing to do with the Watergate break-in," the secretary stated.

He said that the contribution was made legally, but he did not know whether Rep. Mills's campaign aides had reported it under state laws to appropriate authorities.

Mr. Morton said that he did not know what led to Rep. Mills's death, but did not believe it could have been the press reports concerning the campaign contribution alone.

"I think there had got to be a great deal more going on in his mind besides this," Mr. Morton said.

But he said that Rep. Mills had expressed concern over the incident in a telephone conversation Wednesday after the newspaper accounts were published.

Mr. Mills ran for Congress in a special election to fill the seat vacated by Mr. Morton, who had resigned to join the Nixon administration.

Mr. Morton said that other Republican organizations were unable to help at that time and "the only source of money I could think of was the President's re-election campaign."

He said that he asked Mr. Mitchell if the committee would help Mr. Mills, and Mr. Mitchell said he would consult with Maurice Stans, then commerce secretary. Mr. Mitchell resigned in 1972 to lead Mr. Nixon's campaign.

Mr. Morton said that Mr. Mitchell later said that the re-election committee would provide $25,000 to Mr. Mills's campaign, but would appreciate some effort to repay the funds.

The secretary said that he sought contributions to the President's re-election committee and he hoped that resultant donations replaced the $25,000, but he did not know the outcome.

Mr. Morton described Mr. Mills as "a great friend of mine" and "a kind of perfectionist."

Recalling Mr. Mills's days as his administrative aide in Congress, Mr. Morton said: "He was the kind of guy that if we accidentally sent a letter under a frank [congressional postal privilege], he would sit down and send a three-cent or eight-cent stamp to the postmaster general."

Nixon Reiterates Watergate Won't Interrupt Policy

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla., May 25 (Reuters).—President Nixon flew here today to spend a long Memorial Day weekend with his family after reaffirming that he would not be deflected from his governmental objectives by the Watergate scandal.

Mr. Nixon flew in from Washington where he presided over a 90-minute cabinet meeting at which, a spokesman said, very little time was spent discussing Watergate.

The cabinet meeting was devoted mainly to Mr. Nixon's summit meeting with French President Georges Pompidou in Iceland next week and with Soviet party chief Leonid Brezhnev in the United States from June 18 to 26.

Before the cabinet meeting, Mr. Nixon conferred for an hour with foreign policy adviser Henry Kissinger, who has just returned from talks in Paris with North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho on ways to strengthen the Vietnam cease-fire.

Nixon, at POWs' Gala, Assails Threats to National Security

From Wire Dispatches

WASHINGTON, May 25.—President Nixon used yesterday's homecoming party for Vietnam prisoners of war as a forum to lash out at those who threaten the secrecy of national security matters.

The White House party was marked by ovation after ovation as the President and the POWs traded salutes. The POWs told how they felt about Mr. Nixon by giving him a carved wooden plaque with a heraldic lion inscribed to "Our Leader, Our Comrade Richard the Lionhearted."

The President said he had so many honored guests—there were some 680 ex-POWs—that if he toasted them separately "we would be drinking all night and into the middle of the day."

"What's wrong with that," an enthusiastic POW shouted back.

Toasts Applauded

The exuberant guests were on their feet again and again to applaud toasts and an hour-long program of entertainment with Bob Hope at the helm.

Many of the POWs and their wives came up to the President and his chief peace negotiator, Henry A. Kissinger, to personally convey their gratitude for ending the war and releasing the prisoners.

There was plenty of military fanfare, but what got the biggest salute was a little POW flag made from a white handkerchief with bits and pieces of red, white and blue thread and string the men had salvaged in captivity. "That's the most beautiful flag I've ever seen," said Sammy Davis jr. after he had led a hand-clapping rendition of his hit tune, "Candy Man."

Jimmy Stewart told them, "When you fellas stepped off those airplanes, there wasn't a dry eye in the country."

John Wayne declared, "You're the best we have. I'll ride off into the sunset with you anytime."

Earlier, at an afternoon meeting, the President attacked those who threatened the secrecy of national security matters.

"It is time to stop making heroes out of those who steal secrets and publish them in the newspapers," Mr. Nixon said at the climax to extended remarks on the necessity to protect national security.

The POWs stood and applauded and cheered for a full minute.

Counter-Offensive Seen

Mr. Nixon's address apparently marked the beginning of what some White House officials had said would be a counter-offensive in the Watergate case that has rocked the presidency in recent weeks.

When he arrived at the State Department auditorium at 2:30 p.m., the men stood and cheered. A broad smile spread over Mr. Nixon's face as he walked on the stage. He responded by raising his right thumb high into the air, and this brought more cheers from the men, who filled the auditorium.

Speaking from notes for about 40 minutes, Mr. Nixon reviewed his record on foreign and domestic policies. In much the same way as he had in campaign speeches last year, he spoke of the need to keep America strong and the danger of Congress taking "unilateral action" on foreign policy.

Then, with voice rising and lively gestures, Mr. Nixon came to national security and the need for secrecy.

Assails Thefts

"Let me be quite blunt," he said. Had there not been secrecy and security in negotiations, "you men would still be in Hanoi today rather than in Washington. And let me say it is time to stop making heroes out of those who steal secrets and publish them in newspapers."

After the cheering stopped, Mr. Nixon continued:

"We must have confidentiality, we must have secret communication. It isn't that we are keeping something from the American people that they should know, or that we are trying to keep something from the press that the press should know.

"I can assure you that in my terms of office as President, I am going to meet my responsibility to protect the national security of the United States insofar as secrecy is concerned."

Mr. Nixon said he was not concerned about "every little driblet here and there," but rather "the highest classified documents in our national security files."

Cites Disclosures

In that context, he mentioned the release of details on arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union that would "let them know our position before we ever got to the table." Mr. Nixon and others in the White House were upset in 1971 when The New York Times and other papers disclosed, through official sources, some details on arms limitation talks. A treaty with the Soviet Union was later negotiated despite the disclosures.

"I say it is time for a new sense of responsibility in this country and a new sense of dedication of everybody in the bureaucracy that if a document is classified, keep it classified."

Mr. Nixon concluded his speech by saying: "Those first four years in the office were not easy ones for me on the international front, fighting for an adequate defense budget, fighting for a responsible foreign policy. But looking toward the balance of the second four years, let me say I feel better, because out in this room, I think I have some allies, and I will appreciate your help."

Mr. Nixon's speech and his statement of Tuesday marked the first time he had publicly spoken out so sharply against disclosures of national security matters. Previcusly, he had initiated a review of classified documents intended to reduce the number kept out of the public domain.

believed that the mortgage on the home might have been paid off with campaign contributions left over from 1968. Senate investigators denied the report.

The White House also rejected the report and promised a detailed statement. The press also sought details on Mr. Nixon's Key Biscayne, Fla., properties but no information was given on them today.

"The ownership of these properties and the mortgages on them are a matter of public record," the White House said.

Mr. Abplanalp, a Republican campaign backer of Mr. Nixon in his 1968 presidential victory, is a personal friend of the President. He resides north of New York City, but also has a home in the Bahamas where Mr. Nixon has been an occasional guest during trips to Key Biscayne.

Mr. Nixon owns two houses at Key Biscayne which were purchased for $253,000 in 1969. The government is renting two nearby houses for office space and security forces. One of those residences is owned by Mr. Abplanalp.

This is the breakdown of the San Clemente transaction, as reported by the White House:

The Nixons paid $420,000 to two sellers and assumed $1,080,000 in mortgages for the 26 acres. At the same time they borrowed the $625,000 from Mr. Abplanalp.

Later the Nixons bought an additional 2.9 acres of adjacent land for $100,000 for more privacy and better access.

The Nixons, in addition to paying $100,000 for these 2.9 acres, put $123,514 in improvements into the property.

Part of the purchase was financed by a combination of funds from the sale of the Nixon New York apartment.

"There were absolutely no other outside sources of funds involved in the purchase of the home," the White House statement said.

The later sale of most of the land to Mr. Abplanalp was handled through an investment company that he set up for the purpose of acquiring and holding the land. The transaction was accomplished by executing paper work to the Title and Trust Co. of Los Angeles.

These documents were not recorded at the Orange [C]ourthouse in Santa Ana.

PW's Luck Holds —All Bad, Refused A Place at Gala

CINCINNATI, May 25 (UPI).—Dogged by bad luck again, Michael Branch was the only former POW out of nearly 680 who was not allowed to attend a gala dinner on the White House lawn last night.

Mr. Branch, of Highland Heights, Ky., first returned his invitation because he was to undergo dental work at Fort Knox, Ky., but when it was finished ahead of schedule he decided to attend.

But Mr. Branch was told when he arrived in Washington that his invitation had been "closed out" and he was not allowed to enter.

A television station here talked to White House press aide Michael Schrauth, who said there was no room allotted for Mr. Branch and none could be arranged.

This was only the latest in a series of misfortunes for Mr. Branch.

While in Vietnam, he received a letter from his wife, telling him she had left him for another man.

Upset, he took the letter to a beach near his barracks to read it again. While on the beach he was captured by a Viet Cong patrol.

Because he did not have his rifle with him, the Army thought he went AWOL. After he had been in captivity several years, the Army reclassified him as a deserter.

When he was freed earlier this year after seven years in captivity and told his story, he was cleared of all charges.

LTV AEROSPACE CORPORATION

Six members of our team

1. VOUGHT SYSTEMS DIVISION.—This part of LTV Aerospace produces the A-7 close air support aircraft for the U.S. Air Force and U.S. Navy, the new two-place A-7, and S-3A Viking anti-submarine aircraft assemblies for the U.S. Navy. VSD also manufactures the Scout launch vehicle for NASA. It's used by both the United States and several other countries including France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the multi-nation European Space Research Organization. Recently the Scout set a new record for consecutive successful launches among NASA launch vehicles. In addition, support services are provided for NASA's Langley Research Center at Hampton, Virginia. Commercial aircraft activities include major subassemblies for the Boeing 747 and the McDonnell Douglas DC-10.

2. MICHIGAN DIVISION.—This division is the prime contractor for the Lance battlefield missile now deployed with the U.S. Army. The Lance has also been offered to NATO countries. The division is engaged in research and development of other advanced missiles and related systems.

3. GROUND TRANSPORTATION DIVISION.—Manufactures the Airtrans ground transportation system at the world's largest airport soon to be completed in Dallas-Fort Worth. GTD is also involved in the development of other multi-purpose transportation systems such as "people movers" and tracked air cushion vehicles for airports and inter-city travel. The division was recently awarded a contract to study the applicability of its automatic Airtrans transit system to the new Paris Airport at Roissy.

4. VOUGHT HELICOPTER INCORPORATED.—In the U.S. and Canada, VHI markets and services Aerospatiale helicopters: Alouette II, III; SA-341 Gazelle; Lama; and the SA-330 Puma.

5. KENTRON HAWAII, LTD.—Performs Pacific Missile Range services and space tracking services as well as underwater detection and tracking. Kentron is also involved in administrative and technical engineering services for the U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force and NASA in Pacific areas, plus oceanology, communications systems and protective services for industrial security. Kentron recently inaugurated seaTransit service with their 500-passenger cruise ship-turned-commuter vessel in Honolulu, Hawaii.

6. ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY CENTER, INC.—Performs research and exploratory development of new products in technical and scientific fields of aerospace, electronics, and commercial business.

The third device is a sail-shaped canopy which Comdr. Weitz would install. He would do the job by leaning from the hatch of the command ship while Capt. Conrad and Comdr. Kerwin fly it within 10 feet of Skylab, a tricky maneuver which officials hope is not necessary.

Skylab's problems were caused by a solar and meteorite protective blanket which ripped away during launch. Shards of the metal shield jammed a solar panel. Loss of the shield also exposed the naked hull of the ship to the sun and Skylab's interior quickly heated up.

Fly-By Opens Paris Air Show

PARIS, May 25 (IHT).—A fly-by of French aircraft, including the Anglo-French supersonic airliner Concorde and the European Airbus A-300-B, today opened the 30th Paris International Air and Space Show at Le Bourget.

Prime Minister Pierre Messmer and a delegation of French military officials then toured the flight strip, where 183 aircraft were on exhibit.

Mr. Messmer visited the Soviet supersonic airliner Tu-144 and the joint Soviet-American exhibition of the Apollo and Soyuz space linkup scheduled for July, 1975.

Earlier today, U.S. Ambassador to France John N. Irwin 2d inaugurated the U.S.A.-International Pavilion at the show and the Apollo-Soyuz pavilion, with Soviet Chargé d'Affaires V. L. Kizichenko. Willis H. Shapley, deputy associate administrator of NASA, astronaut Gen. Thomas Stafford and a delegation of cosmonauts led by Col. Alexei A. Leonov were present at the space pavilion inauguration.

Russia Names Space Crews For Joint Mission With U.S.

MOSCOW, May 25 (AP).—The Soviet Union announced yesterday that two veteran cosmonauts, backed by three reserve crews, would make up the Russian team for the joint 1975 U.S.-Soviet space flight.

The government news agency, Tass, reported that Alexei Leonov, 39, and Valery Kubasov would man the Soyuz craft for the planned maneuver and docking with an American Apollo space vehicle.

The government announcement appeared to indicate official confidence that a recent series of setbacks in the Soviet space program would not hinder plans for the complicated mission with the United States.

Col. Leonov became the first man to walk in space, on March 18, 1965, when he spent 12 minutes outside his Voskhod-2 spaceship. Mr. Kubasov was the flight engineer aboard the Soyuz-6 mission in October, 1969.

The first back-up crew will be Anatoly Filipchenko, the commander of the Soyuz-7 vehicle which circled the earth 80 times in joint maneuvers with the Soyuz-6 and Soyuz-8 crafts in 1969, and Nikolai Rukavishnikov, the flight engineer aboard the aborted Soyuz-10 mission that attempted to dock with the Salyut-1 space station in April, 1971.

Col. Leonov, Mr. Kubasov and Col. Filipchenko are currently in Paris for the inauguration of the Apollo-Soyuz exhibit at the International Air and Space Show.

The last crews will be made up of Vladimir Dzhanibekov, 31; Boris Andreyev, 33; Yuri Romanenko, 29, and Alexander Ivanchenkov, 33, none of whom have had space-flight experience.

French Barge Strike Traps Yachtsmen

PARIS, May 25 (Reuters).—Hundreds of European pleasure craft were trapped in French rivers and canals today by a nationwide strike of bargemen who have blocked key waterways.

The bargemen began stringing their vessels across the Seine, the Rhone, the Loire and other important rivers 10 days ago to try to force industrial shippers to improve their contracts.

A British Embassy official said hundreds of British, French, German, Dutch and Belgian pleasure craft were reported trapped behind the barge barriers.

"Our advice to anybody thinking of sailing into France would be that they face the same risk," the official added.

2d, 3d Men Arrested In Theft at Vatican

VATICAN CITY, May 25 (UPI).—Vatican police today arrested two more men in connection with thefts from Pope Paul's private apartments, in 1969, while he was away.

A Vatican press spokesman said the two were employees of the Vatican telephone system and were being questioned.

The men, not named, were the second and third arrested in connection with the reportedly minor theft.

All three are being held in "security rooms" in a Vatican palace, the spokesman said. The first man, also unidentified, was arrested May 6.

Ghetto Terror by Young People

State of Emergency Is Sought To Curb Philadelphia's Gangs

PHILADELPHIA, May 25 (NYT).—So far this year 10 young people have been killed in incidents involving street gangs in Philadelphia. Thirty-nine were killed last year, 43 the year before.

"Mothers can't send their children out to play," said state Rep. Hardy Williams, a black legislator from the city's gang-plagued west side.

Gang violence has grown steadily here for nearly a decade. But the recent spread of gangs has sparked strong public reaction, particularly in the black community, which bears the brunt of the violence.

"Innocent people are being killed, many of them our children," said Rep. Williams.

He recently introduced a resolution calling for the legislature to declare a state of emergency in the city because of the violence.

The measure is not expected to be given serious consideration, but it does serve to dramatize the growing severity of Philadelphia's street-gang problem. In recent weeks, citizen groups have staged marches to protest the city's apparent inability to stop widespread shootings, stabbings, beatings and other terrorism by the gangs.

Other Cities, Too

Although a rebirth of street violence has aroused great concern in several of the nation's cities, notably Los Angeles and Chicago, and to a lesser degree Washington and Detroit, the most pervasive problem is in Philadelphia.

While crime in general has been curbed somewhat here, the gang situation rages out of control.

Mayor Frank L. Rizzo, the former police commissioner who was regarded as one of the nation's toughest and most effective policemen, has conceded that the problem is extremely serious and without apparent solution, despite the best efforts of the Police Department's Juvenile Aid Division.

It is estimated that there are between 100 and 150 gangs in the city, possibly more. Most are groups of black youths. The gangs are concentrated in the ghettos of the city's south, west and northern sections. They have 6,000 to 8,000 total membership, ranging in age from 10 or 11 to the mid-20s. "Member" is a loose term, since a gang fight might attract all the residents of a block. On this basis, the potential membership of all gangs could be put at 10,000 or more.

Unlike the switchblade, zip-gun era of the 1950s, the seventies' gang style often includes sophisticated firepower. Early last year, a weapons roundup, during which gang members could turn in their guns without having to answer questions, turned up 11 zip-guns and 41 other firearms—including seven rifles, three automatic pistols and a submachine gun.

Death at Age 16

Since 1962 (when only one person died in gang violence), 245 people have died in Philadelphia in gang-related violence. Possibly a fourth or a fifth of those had no gang connections themselves. They included a 7-year-old shot between the eyes and a 9-year-old shotgunned to death. The average age of the victims was a little over 16.

Normally, the age of the most active gang members appears to be 14 to 18 or 19. Older gang members may have a semi-active status. There are gang members or hangers-on as young as 10 or 11, who are sometimes called "squidgets" or "peewees." They engage in vandalism or shoplifting and, by 13 or so, graduate to street fighting and carrying weapons. There have been girl gangs, but mostly the girls' groups serve as auxiliaries. The girls sometimes carry weapons for the males—and often serve as the cause of gang fights by reporting insults and assaults.

Gang workers say the concept of "turf," or home territory, is a strong force among the gangs and one group ventures into another's territory at its peril.

Advance Party For Brezhnev Ends U.S. Tour

WASHINGTON, May 25 (NYT).—A 35-man Soviet advance party for Leonid I. Brezhnev's trip to the United States next month returned to Washington yesterday after a five-day trip around the country, including an unpublicized tour of Manhattan.

A State Department official who accompanied the group said that it visited San Clemente, Calif., Houston, Detroit and New York but had not yet decided the itinerary for the Soviet Communist party leader's visit, June 18 to 26.

The Russians have told the administration that they want the summit to be mostly a "working visit." Thus, about 90 percent of the time is expected to be spent in Washington or at nearby Camp David.

President Nixon also plans to invite Mr. Brezhnev to the California White House at San Clemente. Houston is a possible stopover because of the space center; Detroit, because of the auto industry, and New York because of its world importance.

In the advance party are Soviet diplomats, security men, communications specialists and press liaison officials. It is led by Yuri N. Chernyakov, general secretary of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, who once served as the No. 2 man in the Soviet Embassy here.

What's in an 'E'? Giannini Stamp $15,000 Reprint

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP).—Because of a spelling error, the U.S. Postal Service has destroyed the initial press run of a stamp honoring A. P. Giannini, the founder of the Bank of America.

A postal spokesman said the 40 million 21-cent regular stamps were destroyed because the designer spelled Mr. Giannini's first name "Amedeo" instead of "Amadeo."

"The stamp designers spelled the name the Italian way," the spokesman said. "The corrected stamps currently are being reprinted at an estimated cost of $15,000." They will be issued June 27.

Senegalese Embassy In Paris Is Bombed

PARIS, May 25 (AP).—A bomb explosion wrecked the entrance to the Senegal Embassy here last night and shattered windows of apartment buildings in a radius of 100 yards.

Cars parked near the embassy were also damaged but there were no casualties. Embassy officials said no threats had been received.

There have been a number of student demonstrations in Senegal in recent weeks.

Richardson Shifts Gunnery Islands Off Puerto Rico

WASHINGTON, May 25 (NYT).—Elliot L. Richardson, in one of his final acts as Secretary of Defense, ordered yesterday that the Navy end its controversial use of the tiny Puerto Rican island of Culebra as a practice gunnery range.

Starting in mid-1975, under the Richardson order, the Navy will shift its gunnery and air bombardment training to ranges on two small, uninhabited islands off the west coast of Puerto Rico—Desecheo and Monito.

The order, in effect, reversed a decision by Mr. Richardson's predecessor, Melvin R. Laird. Mr. Richardson, according to associates, was attempting to remove a strong irritant in U.S.-Puerto Rican relations.

Since 1936, the Navy has been using a section of Culebra—a 7,000-acre island just off the east coast of Puerto Rico—for target practice by ships and aircraft. The Navy's operation has been marked by mounting protests by the 850 inhabitants of Culebra that have made the Navy's use of the island into a major political issue in Puerto Rico.

In April, 1971, Mr. Laird announced that Navy activities would be moved from Culebra by mid-1975—a policy that he reaffirmed in November, 1972, just before the Puerto Rican gubernatorial election. But in December, 1972, he reversed himself, saying the activities on Culebra would continue until at least 1985.

Senate Panel Backs Curtailing Political Appointees as Envoys

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON, May 25 (NYT).—The time-honored practice of rewarding political contributors and supporters with ambassadorships seems destined for sharp limitations in the future.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, long irritated with having to approve as ambassadors some nominees whose qualifications appeared tied more to their purses than their prowess, is expected to issue soon a stiff policy statement that will sharply curtail the number of political appointees to overseas embassies.

The staff of the committee has been ordered to prepare a statement that will provide the following limitations:

- At the recommendation of Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D., Ark., the chairman of the committee, the administration will be told that any nominee who contributes more than $10,000 to a campaign will be viewed as unacceptable by the committee.
- On the basis of a proposal by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D., R.I., the administration will be informed that the committee will allow only 15 percent of U.S. ambassadors to be drawn from the noncareer Foreign Service ranks. For years, the number of noncareer appointments has averaged 30 to 35 percent.

Limits Favored

When a majority of the committee accepts the wording, the policy statement will be sent to the State Department, which is already on record as favoring limits in the practice of rewarding big spenders with embassies.

The most recent case to come to public light was the appointment of Ruth L. Farkas of New York as ambassador to Luxembourg.

Her confirmation was held up when it was learned that she and her husband had given $300,000 to the Republicans last year. She was eventually confirmed and sworn in.

On April 30, while testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of State William P. Rogers endorsed the complaints of the committee about rewarding big contributors and said that President Nixon did also.

'Evil' Persists

He said this "evil" had persisted through all administrations.

"It is a fact of life of our system and we should see what we can do to provide some proper safeguard," he said.

The most important ambassadorship still vacant is that in Moscow, but officials said that it was "a special case" and that the President was looking for "the right man."

Ambassadorships also are open in Pakistan, Denmark, New Zealand, Uruguay, Brazil, Romania, Bulgaria, Kenya, Ecuador, and some other smaller countries.

On all ambassadorships, the career Foreign Service, headed by William O. Hall, submits recommendations of career officers to Mr. Rogers, who then can make his own choice known to Mr. Nixon.

The President can either accept a State Department recommendation, or choose someone outside the career service.

Chang Chien-kun Dies, Pioneer of China's Air Force

TOKYO, May 25 (AP).—Chang Chien-kun, pioneer of China's Air Force, has died of illness in Peking, Radio Peking reported in a broadcast monitored in Tokyo today.

The broadcast said that at the time of his death, Mr. Chang was the deputy commander of the Chinese Air Force and a member of the National People's Congress.

The broadcast did not identify the illness. It said Mr. Chang died last Sunday and that his body was buried at Peking's Papaoshan Cemetery for Revolutionaries.

Mr. Chang joined the Chinese Communist party in 1925 and had headed the party's aviation study class. In 1945, he was ordered by the party to found an aviation college in Communist-occupied northeast China, a few months after Japan surrendered in World War II.

Bishop Joseph F. Flannelly

NEW YORK, May 25 (NYT).—The Most Rev. Joseph F. Flannelly, 78, auxiliary bishop of New York who was administrator of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Cathedral from 1939 to his retirement in 1969, died here yesterday.

David R. Porter

PORTLAND, Maine, May 25 (NYT).—David R. Porter, 91, a retired executive of the Young Men's Christian Association, died Monday at his home in Abingdon, England, near Oxford, where he was one of the original Rhodes scholars in 1904.

He was born in Oldtown, Maine, and attended Bowdoin College.

He won the first Rhodes scholarship from Maine in his sophomore year and went to Trinity College, Oxford.

He joined the faculty of the Mount Hermon School for Boys in East Northfield, Mass., in 1934, and was headmaster from 1935 to 1943.

Auckland Ends A-Test Plea at World Court

THE HAGUE, May 25 (AP).—New Zealand completed its arguments today on the legal reasons why the World Court has jurisdiction to ask France not to conduct nuclear weapons tests in the Pacific. A new series of tests is expected soon.

Today's session ended a week of hearings in which Australia and New Zealand asked the court to rule that further French atmospheric tests would violate international law. The two nations want the court to order France to halt further nuclear tests until the court makes a final decision on the issue. The decision of the court is expected in 10 to 20 days, court officials said today.

Italy Leads Aces In Bridge Finals

GUARUJA, Brazil, May 25 (AP).—Italy held a large lead, over the Aces from Dallas early this morning midway in the finals for the world bridge team championship.

After 64 deals and with 64 remaining to be played, the Italians led the American defenders by 128 international match points. In the first day of the finals, they gained an average of two points on each deal, an unprecedented performance.

The Italian foursome of Benito Garozzo, Giorgio Belladonna, Pietro Forquet and Benito Bianchi was in unbeatable form this afternoon and built up a lead of more than 100 points in the first 24 deals.

On Implementing Truce Pact

Sullivan's Saigon Talks Continue

By Joseph B. Treaster

SAIGON, May 25 (NYT).—U.S. envoy William H. Sullivan met with South Vietnamese officials for two hours today in a second day of talks aimed at finding a way to strictly implement the Paris peace agreement.

The diplomat is expected to leave here tomorrow after a brief morning session with President Nguyen Van Thieu.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy said Mr. Sullivan today went point by point with the South Vietnamese over the substance of discussions held earlier this month in Paris, between presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho, of North Vietnam.

The spokesman would not disclose any details of the meetings today and yesterday. But South Vietnamese sources said attention had focused on the establishment of distinct zones of control in South Vietnam and the creation of a National Council of National Reconciliation and Concord, which is to organise countrywide elections.

New Truce Orders

They said the officials also discussed issuing new orders for an immediate cease-fire, the possibility of meetings between frontline commanders and means of guaranteeing freedom of movement to the members of the International Commission of Supervision and Control (ICSC).

The government appeared receptive to putting out new cease-fire orders and to extending its cooperation with the commission, the sources said, but it was believed to have remained firm on the two principal points, the control zones and the matter of battlefield meetings.

The sources said that the Communists had modified their previous position on the two main questions slightly, but that the government regarded the changes as insignificant and mainly cosmetic.

From the start of the cease-fire Jan. 28, neither of the warring sides has been willing to accept the territorial claims of its opponents.

In the meantime, however, combat in South Vietnam has dropped to an all-time low.

Canada Boycott Averted

SAIGON, May 25 (AP).—A threatened Canadian boycott of further peacekeeping activities in South Vietnam was postponed today until Monday, when ICSC again takes up Canadian efforts to protest Polish and Hungarian attempts to block discussion of alleged North Vietnamese troop infiltration into South Vietnam.

The walkout was averted by adjourning the meeting until Monday to permit the Polish and Hungarian delegations to get new instructions from their governments.

Michel Gauvin, head of the Canadian delegation to the ICSC, later made clear the consequence of his walkout would have been Canada's refusal to participate in further activities of the commission.

He told newsmen that he could not permit the issue of infiltration to be put aside while the commission went on to other peacekeeping problems.

Red Positions Bombed

PHNOM PENH, May 25 (UPI).—B-52 bombers dropped more than 1,000 tons of explosives on Communist positions in Cambodia over a seven-day period, military sources said today.

The planes attacked an area three miles south of Highway 4, between the capital and the Kompong Som seaport between May 15 and 22, the sources said.

A U.S. pilot was killed today in the crash of an Air Force A-7 attack bomber near the Angkor Wat temple ruins, a U.S. statement said. It was the second Corsair to be lost in action in Cambodia this month.

The U.S. Pacific command in Honolulu said the Corsair was on a combat mission when it crashed about one and one half miles east of Siem Reap. It said the cause of the crash was unknown.

Clerics Protest Bombing

NEW YORK, May 25 (AP).—A letter from an interreligious group to chaplains at every U.S. Air Force base in this country and Asia today urged them to encourage American airmen to refuse to do any more bombing of Cambodia.

Pilots and crewmen should leave the Air Force, resist or disobey orders rather than continue to participate in bombing that "is an offense against God and man," the letter said.

It was signed by 14 U.S. church leaders including the Rev. Dr. Robert Moss, president of the United Church of Christ; Roman Catholic Bishop Thomas Gumbleton, of Detroit; United Methodist Bishop James Armstrong, of Aberdeen, S.D., and Episcopal Bishop Robert Dewitt, of Philadelphia.

Deserter Quits Hiding, Joins Mother in Plea for Amnesty

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP).—An Army deserter came out of hiding yesterday to tell a group of congressmen that unconditional amnesty would help erase a decade of bitterness over the Indochina war.

Edward Sowder, 25, of Detroit, appeared before an unofficial House panel discussing amnesty for men who fled the draft, deserted or resisted the war while in the service.

His statement followed emotional testimony by his mother, Lori, who said that her working-class family had not been able to afford to give him a college education that would have given him a deferment.

She said that he went into the Army against her wishes and that she had told him the "only thing he could accomplish was to get killed."

Her son told the panel that when he volunteered for Vietnam, he supported the war.

"I was assigned to an evacuation hospital where we received fresh casualties direct from combat areas. Many of these victims were Vietnamese civilians, mostly women and children hit by U.S. artillery and bombing.

"Many had been severely burned by napalm and white phosphorus, weapons used only by the U.S."

He said that those scenes and the attitude of some of his fellow GIs led him to decide to desert.

"In April, 1970, I made my decision . . . I went on strike against the war. For the past three years, except for a period in Canada, I've lived underground in America, cut off from my family and friends.

"I make no apology for my act of resistance. I could do nothing else at the time. But underground life has become intolerable to me, so I'm here today, to draw attention to the true facts concerning my case and the cases of tens of thousands just like me.

"We are not criminals to be hunted and imprisoned.

'The Long Process'

"Only by winning a universal, unconditional amnesty for all categories of war resisters can we begin the long process of changing our country and learning from the decade of blood and bitterness in Indochina," he said.

Later, he turned himself over to Capitol police, who took him into custody. A Capitol police spokesman later said that, accompanied by his lawyer, he surrendered to military authorities.

The hearing was called by Rep. Bella Abzug, D., N.Y., who is the auther of a bill which would grant unconditional amnesty.

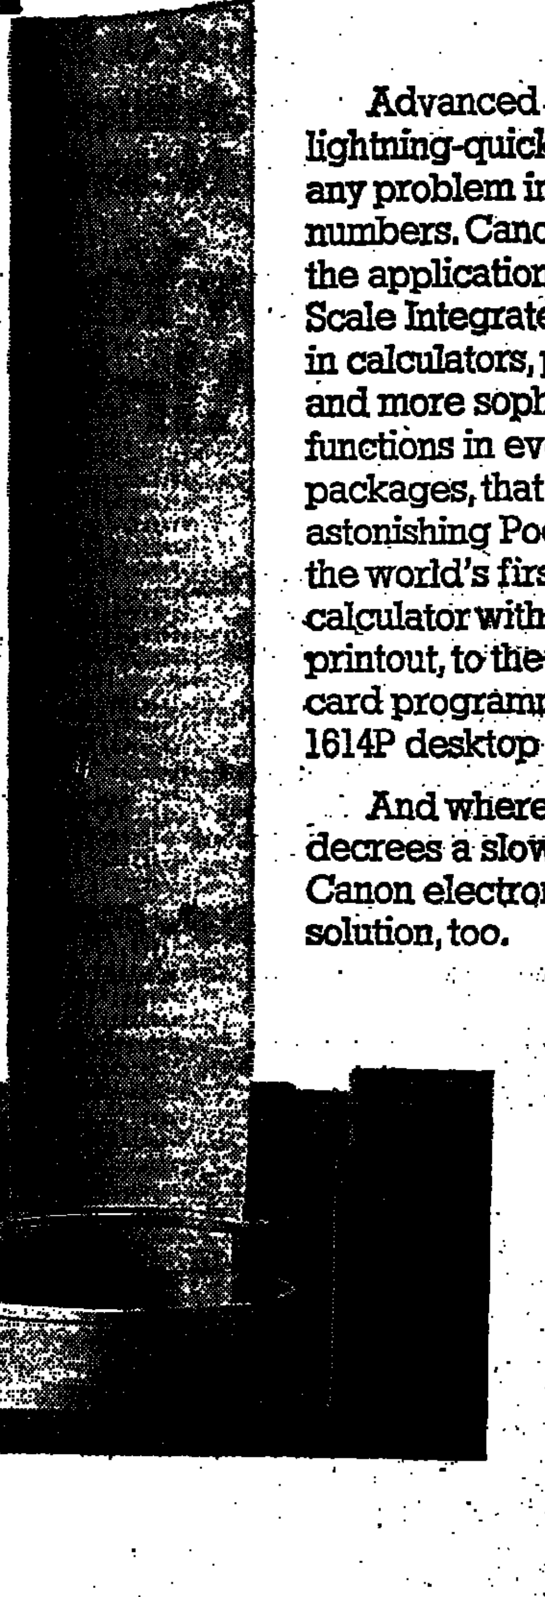
The quick and the slow. By Canon.



Advanced electronics give lightning-quick answers to any problem involving numbers. Canon pioneered the application of LSI's (Large Scale Integrated Circuits) in calculators, providing more and more sophisticated functions in ever smaller packages, that range from the astonishing Pocketronic, the world's first pocketsize calculator with full thermal printout, to the compact, punch card programmed, 14-memory, 1614P desktop calculator.

And where nature decrees a slower approach, Canon electronics are the solution, too.

Canon's famous F-1 system camera can function fully automatically, adjusting itself to any variation in light and subject, timing its exposures, advancing its film—all without any human interference.

New approaches and inventions characterize Canon entries into ever widening fields.

Only one thing remains unchanged: Canon's uncompromising precision in manufacturing and quality control.

He drove them to separate, isolated parts of town, tied each one to a tree and drove off. Then he telephoned the parents of the brothers and told them where to find the car and ransom notes.

Boys Call Home

By the time the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Stein, found the automobile, all the boys had worked themselves loose from their bonds and called home.

The story of the abduction was carried over local radio and television. The afternoon newspaper carried a front-page story and pictures of the boys—Robert and Richard Stein, and James Dent.

About 4 p.m. Wednesday, the Stein family received another telephone call demanding that Mrs. Stein take $60,000 in a package to a supermarket in a Jacksonville suburb and wait there for another telephone call. Subsequent telephone calls sent the Steins to three different places with the package—which contained no money. It was finally left in a park, but the kidnapper didn't appear.

Mr. Touchton said the suspect kidnapper—Robert Fultz, 35—told them later that he got cold feet and simply went home to bed. "He said he got up about 4 a.m. and thought he'd better go untie the boys or something," the detective said. "A bit later, he got the morning paper and saw that they had been free since before lunchtime the previous day.

'Everybody Knew'

"It is inconceivable to me how he didn't know the boys were free," Mr. Touchton said. "Everybody in town knew. It was all over the radio, the TV and papers. But all the time he was making plans to collect the ransom."

Police arrested Mr. Fultz yesterday and charged him with kidnapping for ransom. They were led to Mr. Fultz on the basis of their own investigation and by a composite drawing of the kidnapper put together with help from the three boys.

"He said he did it because he was in bad financial trouble. He needed money badly," Mr. Touchton said. "He just picked the first boys he came to."

Jordanian Statement Misattributed to Scheel

AMMAN, May 25 (UPI).—A dispatch by United Press International on Wednesday said that West German Foreign Minister Walter Scheel and Jordan's Crown Prince Hassan discussed the "grave situation" that had resulted from continued Israeli occupation of Arab territories.

The dispatch erroneously attributed this to a joint Jordanian-West German statement. In fact, the statement was issued by the Jordanian Foreign Ministry.

In Beirut, Mr. Scheel today rejected the idea of an individual West German initiative to solve the Middle East crisis. But he ended a three-country tour of the Middle East by pledging West Germany's help to "smooth the path" for any other initiative.

Iceland Gives U.K. Apology For Mob Act

REYKJAVIK, May 25 (Reuters).—Iceland today apologized to Britain for yesterday's attack in which thousands of young Icelanders shattered every window of the British Embassy with stones.

The secretary of Iceland's Foreign Ministry, Ingvi Ingvarsson, went to the embassy to hand British Ambassador John McKenzie a note which apologized for the attack and called the demonstrators a deplorable mob.

Foreign Minister Einar Agustsson planned to call on Mr. McKenzie to add a personal apology.

The incident yesterday represented the rise in tempers in the "cod war" which has existed between Britain and Iceland since Iceland unilaterally extended its coastal fishing limits to 50 miles last September.

Repairs by Iceland

Iceland is to pay for damages to the embassy. Workmen today started clearing up the debris and repairing the windows and gardens.

The attack, a three-hour siege of the embassy, followed a mass meeting in Reykjavik's main square to protest the presence of British Navy frigates inside the 50-mile limit.

The three navy vessels moved into the area last weekend to support British trawlers fishing there.

Today, a lone Icelandic gunboat sat helplessly in a calm sea, hemmed in by British frigates while 30 British trawlers fished nearby.

Two other gunboats, the Thor and the Aegir, apparently gave up trying to challenge the British frigates. They sailed away last night from the disputed fishing ground off southwest Iceland, leaving their sister ship, the Odinn, by itself.

Says He Would Have Defied Blackmail

Lambton Denies U.K. Security Risk

LONDON, May 25 (UPI).—Lord Lambton, one of two government ministers who resigned this week in a sex scandal, said tonight that he never would have yielded to blackmail.

Scotland Yard sources said that the London apartment building where he visited call girls is near a building housing staff members of the Chinese Embassy.

In an interview on British Broadcasting Corp. television, Lord Lambton said: "Perhaps one of my failings was the absolute knowledge that in no circumstances would I have consented to blackmail."

He said that if compromising photographs of himself and two call grils had been shown to him instead of to the Sunday News of the World newspaper, "I would have gone to the police. I would never have submitted to blackmail, so there was no security risk."

Lord Lambton, who was undersecretary for the air force, said the fact that he and Earl Jellicoe, who resigned as leader of the House of Lords and lord privy seal, both publicly confessed relations with call girls and resigned as a consequence "will somewhat have palliated our offense."

But, he said, their actions will have done some harm to Britain's governing Conservative party. "I very much regret it," he added.

Model Is Charged

LONDON, May 25 (AP).—Model Janie Jones, arrested a week ago in the British Broadcasting Corp. "payola scandal," was charged today with soliciting a man to murder her former husband, American pop singer and composer John Christian-Dee.

The charge was made during a brief hearing at Bow Street Magistrates Court. Miss Jones was ordered held in custody on 12 charges of procuring prostitutes for BBC officials and threatening a potential prosecution witness.

Soho's Prostitutes See Selves As Social Workers, Study Says

LONDON, May 25 (UPI).—A survey of prostitutes in London's Soho night-life district shows the composite-picture prostitute—whatever that may be—is "not a boozy, feeble-minded slut" but a "firmly intelligent woman ... who regards her work as a social service."

Reporting his findings yesterday in the journal New Society, sociology graduate student Lionel James said one of 10 prostitutes whom he interviewed was even taking a university course in psychology in her spare time.

Mr. James said the composite picture that emerged was that the average Soho prostitute these days "is not a boozy, feeble-minded slut who associates mainly with criminals but a firmly intelligent woman who enjoys spending time with her family and regards her work as a useful social service."

All said they were prostitutes mainly for the money, but also because they could be their own bosses, and all believed their activities prevented a sharp increase in sex crimes.

The prostitutes reported a major talent needed for their work was being a "good listener" because many customers only wanted someone with whom they could discuss their troubles, rather than sex, Mr. James said.

They claimed they had preserved many marriages by providing outlets for "special tastes" which wives would not tolerate and likened their work to that of a doctor, he said.

Only one prostitute said she derived sexual satisfaction from her work. The others said they remained sexually unaroused with customers but enjoyed sex with their husbends or friends.

Mr. James said his interviews showed Soho prostitutes were "rational-thinking women ... to me they were normal women."

Bones in Sicily Ravine Show 'Mafia Cemetery' No Legend

PALERMO, Sicily, May 25 (AP).—Police today started to examine four sacks of bones pulled from a 1,650-foot-deep ravine known as the "Mafia cemetery" in the barren mountains south of Palermo.

The ravine outside Roccabusambra, 40 kilometers from Palermo, had long been rumored as being the graveyard of many Mafia victims. "But for a long time we believed this to be merely a sinister legend," a police officer said.

Various broken human bones were found in the upper part of the ravine in 1969, but police efforts to ascertain identities were fruitless.

A prosecutor ordered a thorough search when an avowed Mafia killer, Vincenzo Streva, said he had thrown the body of a man into the "Mafia cemetery" in 1955, police said.

Six cave explorers filled four sacks with bones yesterday. The bones included parts of human skulls, thighbones and ribs along with animal bones.

Investigating Judge Giuseppe Russo said he hoped the discovery would help shed light on the disappearance of at least two dozen persons from 1954 to 1963. They fell victims in the war of two Mafia clans based in the town of Corleone.

Report in Rome

In Rome, meanwhile, it was reported that a parliamentary investigating commission estimated the Mafia's turnover in narcotics traffic at $850 million to $1 billion. The investigators said the Sicilian underworld had branched out to Europe, Asia and America to control a worldwide drug racket.

Socialist Sen. Michele Zuccala, a member of the anti-Mafia commission, said in a report that Switzerland had become one of the main bases of the Mafia narcotics racket.

He said many of the "big shots" attended a Mafia summit meeting in Zurich in October last year. Participants, he said, included Luciano Liggio and Salvatore Greco, wanted by police for 10 years.

"The summit conferences," the report said, "were to coordinate big movements of capital, generally coming from the United States to Switzerland to finance smuggling of drugs."

Mrs. Meir's Party To Admit Arabs

TEL AVIV, May 25 (AP).—Premier Golda Meir's Labor party, a 50-year-old Jewish political movement, decided yesterday to allow Arabs to join its ranks.

A party statement said any Arab "who identifies with the principles of the state" would be allowed to join.

The party is an outgrowth of the Mapai movement, founded in the 1920s. It previously controlled two affiliated Arab parties, but sources said Labor may abolish at least one of them and send some of its members to Parliament as Labor delegates.

In Israel, the party chooses parliamentary representatives not voters.

Sudanese President Quits, Then Returns

BEIRUT, May 25 (UPI).—President Gaafar Numeiri of the Sudan resigned Tuesday, but withdrew his resignation Wednesday under popular pressure, Omdurman radio said.

Mr. Numeiri resigned his posts as president and chairman of the Sudanese Socialist Union because his decision to raise the prices of sugar, gas and cigarettes was resented by the people, the radio said.

But large numbers of people surrounded the headquarters of the Socialist Union, demanding that he stay as president, forcing him to reverse his decision, the radio said.

ART IN PARIS

Ad Reinhardt's 'Absolute Statement'

By Michael Gibson

PARIS, May 25 (IHT).—Dolphins and sharks are both big, sleek creatures that live in the sea and have dorsal fins. Yet they belong to different phyla of living creatures.

The late Mark Rothko, Barnett Newman, and Ad Reinhardt (1913-1967) are also bunched together superficially in the public memory. They have certain formal similarities, and lived in the sea of a single art age. By temper and intent, however, they differ. Rothko and Newman have been shown to the Parisian public and now it's Reinhardt's turn (at the Grand Palais to July 2, after which the show goes to Vienna).

Reinhardt perplexed, irritated and frightened the New York public of the sixties by producing nothing but "black paintings" during the last 15 years of his life. These works, 5 feet by 5 feet, mat, divided into nine equal parts, use three almost undistinguishable shades at the utmost limits of blackness. "The last paintings that can be painted," was, in substance, his description of them. He also described them as roughly the size of a man and the width of a man's outstretched arms (neither big nor small, without size) in three sections (no composition), a horizontal form negating a vertical one (no shape, no top nor bottom, no direction), three dark colors (no light), without contrast (no color) . . . "but absolutely not anti-art."

His Writing

There is something Cromwellian in this whole venture, something stern, self-disciplined, self-immolating, ambitious, dogmatic, self-conscious, absolute, purist, puritanical. Reinhardt published a number of dicta on the subject of art ("Art as Art") whose formal presentation might have been modeled on that of Wittgenstein's "Tractatus Logico Philosophicus" (less the decimal system of numbering the sentences).

Reinhardt was obviously a philosopher of art, or perhaps, more exactly, a theologian of art, which he tends to define with negative terms as the theologian who, in speaking about God, restricts himself to saying what He is Not. This strangely inflexible mental edifice, graced only by the snubs of irony studding his dicta, strains to disengage art from everything that is not art, just as the theologian strained to disengage God from the lurking archetypes of the psyche and the energies of the surrounding cosmos.

One may wonder that he should have felt impelled to generalize the principles emerging out of his own later work in a text such as the "Twelve Rules for a New Academy" that propound these principles as valid for everyone. There is some sort of (ironical?) abuse of language here, that also characterizes a statement of the sort: "I am painting the last paintings that can be painted" which should, in fact, have been phrased: "The last paintings that I am capable of painting." The limit reached by Reinhardt was the limit both of his own power to imagine and to reason and of the theoretical path he chose to follow. I doubt that he himself supposed these works actually spelled the end of all painting, though possibly that of painting as he imagined it.

Reinhardt's absolutism is confronted, but not tempered, by his inclination for the spoof (in 1935 he was the editor of the Columbia "Jester") as manifested in a number of drawings, the last of which, to the best of my knowledge, was published a couple of years before he started doing his black paintings. They are not so much drawings as collages dominated by a Reinhardt text of a sort typified by the following (inscribed upon a representation of the art world in the form of a mandala): "The Art World was created in four days in four sections, 40 years ago, and originally in 4004 B.C. Today Minor Artists have 400 Disciples and more favored mediocre Artists have 44,000 Devotees approximately. There are 4,040 Rules of Art Conduct. The Ten Thousand Things are Four . . . (etc., etc.)." What the humor ultimately leads to is a very bitter sense of being caught in a trap of absurdities whose visible form was the maze of the art world.

The black paintings—about a quarter of the show—are indeed very absolute statements—domineering, ominous, at the limit of visual intelligibility, violently ambiguous towards the viewer who can never find the right position from which actually to see them. If you stand off, they appear uniformly black—actively black, like the dark holes in the cosmos which, some astronomers suppose, have so tremendous a gravitational pull that no radiation of light or heat can escape from them. If you stand close enough to distinguish the undistinguishable you no longer see the overall picture, and wonder what good it does you to make this overfine distinction if it turns out to be irrelevant because unconnected with the totality of the painting before you.

As for Reinhardt's earlier work, which is heavily represented in the exhibition, it sometimes also attacks the eye of the viewer, but in a different way, smiting it with painful contrasts that bespeaks an ambition equal to that of the black paintings, but thrusting in an opposite direction. The colors are vigorous and joyless—their choice appears to be governed by the mind rather than by the senses. Indeed, the whole approach seems to hinge on a mental analysis serving, almost abstractly, a will to power.

What power does this refer to? The power, I believe, to make an absolute statement that impales the viewer like a butterfly on a pin; a statement with the logical infallibility of Fate, inescapable and undeniable; the power to communicate, not relatively, but absolutely—a communication to which there can be no reply. This is Reinhardt's tragic paradox, for the absolute communication that allows no reply can't be a communication at all.

Ultimate, absolute statements shrivel the realities they strive to deal with. The purist's will to deliver his deity from all contingencies strips him of his flesh and leaves behind only the memory of an idea.

Hence Conceptual Art.

Around the European Galleries

London

Michael Tain, Burke's, 10 Clifford St., London, W1, to May 31.

Tain, a Scottish painter with a French technique, chooses to show his latest Berkshire and Spanish landscapes, together with a few nudes, on the walls of a dining club. His marvelous in-painting of light shows to maximum advantage on the dark walls and discreet shadows of the club.

* * *

Alberto Vasquez, Acoris Surrealist Art Centre, 31 Brook St., London, W1, to May 31.

So many pseudo-surrealists have been thrown up in recent years, that it is a great pleasure to see the authentically subconscious directly transferred to canvas and paper, and with a mastery of draftsmanship and technique of the highest order. Some of the drawings, indeed, rank as masterpieces; and the paintings would hold their own in any surrealist collection.

* * *

David Boyd, New Grafton Gallery, 1a Grafton St., London, W1, to May 31.

Under the generic title "The Exiles," Australian Boyd's new paintings deal with the exile of the British colonists and the exile they imposed on the aborigines. But at a deeper level many of these paintings express a more basic exile, that of the adult from the childhood world of make-believe and innocence. Beautiful pictures these; beautifully painted.

* * *

William Pye, Redfern Gallery, 20 Cork St., London, W1, to May 31.

This show is of five large new sculptures and smaller versions of them. Constructed in stainless steel, they have an airy and precise elegance about them more pleasing than the earlier and more mundane pieces. They show a new hope and direction for British abstract sculpture.

Maria Theresa Fernandes, Covent Garden Gallery, Floral Hall, Covent Garden, London, WC2, to May 31.

This is a first exhibition of principally abstract pieces, in which embroidery and colored canvas collage is combined with straightforward painting on canvas. The results are often attractive and sometimes startling.

* * *

Rosie Lee, Piccadilly Gallery, 16a Cork St., London, W1, to June 2.

In her third one-woman show the painter continues the portrayals of green hedge-lined gardens, the setting for curiously disquieting childhood memories and happenings. This most recent series introduces humanoid rocks and a great number of birds.

* * *

Perkins Harnly, Crane Arts, 321 Kings Road, London, SW3, to June 2.

Harnly, a 72-year-old supply man in a Los Angeles cafeteria, is an accomplished fantasist, a former line draftsman for the New Yorker, an MGM designer and a gardener among other things. His delightful large watercolors have a subtle humor about them, as when he oversets a gas station with a riband-bearing heavenly choir; or a cat with indigestion, literally full of canaries, who plaintively eyes a box of Alka-Seltzer . . .

* * *

Bird Paintings, Sladmore Gallery, 32 Bruton Place, London, W1, to June 2.

The spring exhibition of bird paintings has now become one of the gallery's annual events. This year's 50 items include a large 18th-century oil of pheasants in a landscape by Carl Wilhelm de Hamilton and an 1882 watercolor of a Mexican Crested Eagle by Harry Bright. Also represented are such contemporaries as David Reid-Henry, Ian Armour-Chelu, Bryan Reed and David Ord Kerr.

—MAX WYKES-JOYCE.

Paris

Paul Jenkins, Galerie Karl Flinker, 25 Rue de Tournon, Paris to June 23.

Seven oils and 30 watercolors by American artist Paul Jenkins; colorful, lyrical works that raise banners of color and send them streaming across the painting's flat surface, hanging onto a central or lateral mast, and never covering the full expanse of the canvas.

* * *

Jean Cotté, Galerie de France, 3 Rue du Faubourg Saint-Honoré, Paris 8, to June 20.

Take a romantic, vigorously tormented landscape, with stormy, overstated yet classical colors, keep the shapes—the lights and shades and movement, but delete the subject, so that the viewer, approaching, will discover nothing but colored nebulosities, and you will have an idea of Jean Cotté's manner. The idea is well used on the whole and the results tease the eye and mind.

* * *

Panamarenko (pseudonym) is a young Belgian (b. 1940) who builds man-powered flying machines. Shades of Leonardo and Jules-Verne and the film about flying machines. Panamarenko says they fly, and one did actually get him off the ground for a short distance. Several of these devices are on show, along with drawings and scale models.

* * *

Salon de Mai, Musée d'Art Moderne de la Ville de Paris, 16 Quai de New York, Paris 16, to June 17.

Paintings, prints, sculptures, objects and kinetic works by well known and less known artists, among them Calder, Tapiès, Man Ray, Millares, Messagier, Picasso . . .

Equipo Cronica, Galerie Stadler, 51 Rue de Seine, Paris 6, to June 9.

Two Spanish painters, Manuel Valdès and Raphael Solbes, work as a team under the name of Equipo Cronica. Their aim is a form of visual art criticism and their form is that of visual quotation from famous works. They paint with the utmost competence, yet voluntarily and perhaps also involuntarily in a dull manner. Which calls to mind Erza Pound's advice to Eliot who wanted to pastiche (was it Pope?) in the "Waste Land": "Unless you can write better than he does, don't do it."

—MICHAEL GIBSON

Brussels

Brandani, Galerie Isy Brachot, 62a Avenue Louise, Brussels, to June 9.

Cameos of church life seen with an impish eye have long been Brandani's specialty. In this show, nuns strip to bathe nude in a vat of water, Orthodox priests set up stalls in which to sell hand-painted icons, baby centaurs replace cherubs as garland-bearers, angels and devils "fly" each other on cords as living kites. His landscapes have echoes of Flemish primitives with minutely detailed flowers and plants. The subject is pure—or rather, impure—fun; the technique, polished and painterly.

This is a first show and the work is strong, inventive and imaginative—object-constructions in an unforced, surrealist vein. A full-size commode is the centerpiece, painted red, outlined in gray with drawers and contents lined in smoky blue. Each of the 24 drawers (hours) can be pulled open or left shut, changing the effect of the piece at will. Each contains something relevant to its hour: a loud screech (the morning alarm), a breakfast set with magnetically jumping pill, etc. It's neatly done and carefully finished.

THE ART MARKET

Interest in English Pewter, Oak Furniture on Upswing

By Souren Melikian

LONDON, May 25 (IHT).—Few people collect English pewter for its intrinsic artistic value—but it seems to appeal to those who are looking for authentic metalware with which to decorate their renovated farmhouses.

This explains, at least in part, why the popularity of pewter—and consequently its auction price level—is associated with a certain type of furniture, specifically oak furniture, which calls for a certain type of art object.

English pewter was very popular—and very expensive, outselling good silver on many occasions—a few generations ago when anything that smacked of the Middle Ages à la Sir Walter Scott was in favor. But pewter went out, as did the gloomy décor of the late 19th century, sham stained-glass windows, oak paneling and all kinds of metal bric à brac along with the Waverley novels.

Between the two world wars, pewter—and all it went with—sank into oblivion where it remained until about four years ago. Then, the Maxwell Joseph collection of oak furniture came up for sale at Sotheby's and prices began to rise.

London specialists (among others Nigel Muers-Raby, Christie's expert on this sort of thing) say that renewed interest in pewter is inseparable from the oak furniture revival. As soon as oak furniture began catching on again, buyers wanted appropriate objects to go with it—and pewter was a natural choice. By the fall of 1971, Christie's was holding regular sales of oak and pewter—they now have four each season, the latest one taking place yesterday.

If success is to be judged on the numbers of items sold or the number of collectors, the English auctioneers have been only moderately successful. Most of the buyers are dealers—among them, Richard Mundey (who deals in pewter exclusively), Jack Ca[...] and others.

The Cannes Festival, veteran guests complain, is not what it used to be. Its former image of Hollywood-on-holiday—the Hollywood of legend—has certainly changed. The whirl of sumptuous dinner parties, cocktail receptions, casino suppers and celebrity-studded beach luncheons has slowed to almost a halt and the beauty chorus of starlets has vanished. Movie money has become tight and after 1968 lavish displays were—at least temporarily—out of fashion.

Yet Cannes still draws the luminaries of the cinema: this year Ingrid Bergman, serving as president of the jury, Ingmar Bergman, Joanne Woodward, Paul Newman, François Truffaut, Frank Capra, Sarah Miles, Claire Bloom, Malcolm MacDowell and Dominique Sanda being among those attending this year.

Some of the more interesting films—"Cries and Whispers," "The Holy Mountain," "Visions of Eight," "Wattstax," the two versions of Ibsen's "Doll's House"—have been seen out of competition as though to grant the contenders a better opportunity to shine. The judgments of the jury can scarcely be taken very seriously as they are based obviously less on sound aesthetic evaluations than on the policy of honoring as many of the participants as possible.

The function of the Cannes Festival is no longer to provide a glamorous show, but facilitate business transactions. Producers of small-budget movies come to sell the foreign rights to their wares and package deals for future films are arranged. Critics from near and far can examine a worldwide range of new motion pictures and confer with their colleagues. The sunshine is the same, but the old-time glitter has gone.

LONDON THEATER

The Wild Wit of Edward Bond

By John Walker

LONDON, May 25 (IHT).—Edward Bond calls "The Sea" at the Royal Court a comedy, and so it is and, in a season where so far the best has not been good enough, it is as refreshing as a plunge into the ocean on a hot day, although it leaves a salt taste behind. It is also, glory be, a play, well-made although not in a conventional way and a deft, wry exploitation of the possibilities of the stage and that, too, these days is a rarity.

Mr. Bond's wit, that burgeoned in the dark corners of "Saved" and "Lear," here blossoms into full flower. He is witty in the way that Wilde and Shaw were witty, although the characters still inhabit the universe of his other plays, a bleak and harsh world where the weak are savaged by the strong and the strong misuse a power that depends upon the acquiescence of society as a whole.

Set in a tiny English seaside village, it begins with a tempestuous storm and ends in sunlit calm with two young lovers breaking away from an isolated hierarchical society. This optimism is hardly total: the time is the early 1900s and we, at least, know that ahead of them lies a terrible war and, indeed, throughout the play gunfire pounds with the same relentless fury as the sea.

The play deals with a classic class confrontation: Mrs. Rafi (Coral Browne), a bullying grande dame with a coterie of simpering ladies, trampling on everyone's feelings because she feels they expect it, versus the village draper Hatch (Ian Holm), a sad, mad little man full of fears that visitors from outer space are stealing people's brains and replacing them with bits of machinery. The contest is, of course, an uneven one.

The style—the play proceeds by eight self-contained scenes—allows Mr. Bond some marvelous set pieces. There are two beautiful battles between Miss Browne and Mr. Holm, the one insultingly imperious, the other determinedly obsequious. In their second meeting, Mr. Holm is quietly brilliant, writhing and seething with a frustration that he vents on his merchandise, cutting and hacking away at some curtain material in an orgy of self-destruction.

But the finest moments of black farce come in a funeral held on a cliff top, brilliantly sustained by the entire cast under the superbly-controlled direction of William Gaskill. It is almost matched by a drawing room performance of Greek tragedy that has Miss Browne, as an improbable Orpheus, giving a rendition of "There's No Place Like Home" just before she is rowed across the Styx to the tune of the Eton boating song ("Jolly Boating Weather . . .").

The play is at its weakest when Mr. Bond stops the action in favor of some dubious philosophizing by Evens (Alan Webb), a beachcomber who preaches an acceptance of things, a belief that endurance without despair is enough. He offers stoic comfort. "You don't have to bear it long," he says to a young boy inquiring about the reason for life. He is given the last scene of the play and it makes for an unconvincing end, reminiscent of Shaw at his windiest.

Still, it is for its wild wit that I value the play, and for its extension of Mr. Bond's concern with the way the structure of society deforms people, round pegs smashed into square holes. The saddest thing about the deluded Hatch is that, in a way, he is right. People are being turned into machines but, as Evens murmurs, it is we who are the strange visitors from space. Even Mrs. Rafi is conscious of the demands society makes upon her and sees stretching ahead of her a tedious vista of effrontery and arrogance among small-minded mediocrities.

"The Sea" made me laugh and think, more than any play I have seen since "Jumpers." Mr. Holm and Miss Browne are faultless in their performances, and given admirable support, particularly by Gillian Martell as Miss Browne's complaisant companion—there's a lovely moment when she upstages a funeral oration by rummaging in her bag for smelling salts. It is a play to give one fresh heart.

Robin Phillips's production of Ibsen's "Rosmersholm" at the Greenwich Theatre is a Freudian one, emphasizing Rebecca West's unknowing incest with the man she regarded as an adopted father. It doesn't help me to enjoy it any the more.

Ibsen asks a particularly modern question—How can those who do not believe in God pass judgment on themselves?—and answers it in a very 19th-century way. The double suicide of Rosmer and Rebecca, in expiation of the death of Rosmer's wife, remains a melodramatic gesture, whatever Freud might have thought.

It is not made any the less so by Jeremy Brett's spineless Rosmer. It is always difficult to take this weak man as an idealist capable of ennobling others and here, in his stoop-shouldered, shuffling portrayal, Mr. Brett conveys no hint of why he should attract the attentions of Joan Plowright's forceful no-nonsense Rebecca. Miss Plowright is uneasy in her part, too, although her scenes with John Nettleton's excellent Dr. Kroll have some impact. The miscasting extends to Margery Mason's casual maid.

At the Roundhouse, a new musical "Kingdom Coming" is appropriately set in an extinct volcano, although the show turns out to be more molehill than mountain, a tiny, irrelevant excrescence, despite the energies of John Bluthal and, especially, Antonia Ellis who demonstrates that she has the talent for far better surroundings. The fault lies with David Climie's and Ronnie Cass's book—about the generation gap and hippie versus big business morality—which seems to have no connection whatsoever with the brash and bouncy music and lyrics of Bill Snyder and Stanley Baum.

Cecil Taylor's "The Grand Adultery Convention" at The Almost Free Theatre is a lightweight squib at the expense of the worst kind of leftwing theater. Well-directed by Roland Rees and well performed, particularly by Allan Surtees as a genuine worker, its fun is at the expense of easy and obvious targets and cannot be included among the best of Mr. Taylor's work.

On Tuesday, Angela Lansbury opens in the London production of "Gypsy" at the Piccadilly Theatre. This musical, based on the life of stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, is directed by Arthur Laurents, who also wrote the book, and has music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim.

On Thursday, a musical, "The Me Nobody Knows," a version of the off-Broadway success given a London setting, opens at the Shaw Theatre.

Half a Loaf on Berlin

Leonid I. Brezhnev's visit to West Germany must have produced everything Chancellor Willy Brandt had hoped for—except a clear-cut statement on Berlin. The Soviet Communist leader heaped praise on his host, signed economic and cultural agreements that could substantially advance détente, and pledged Moscow's cooperation in building a new Europe of "peace, mutual trust and reciprocally advantageous cooperation among all countries."

Mr. Brezhnev bid boldly and unabashedly for West German capital, industrial and technological assistance for a host of projects in Russia, asked for long-run, low-interest credits to finance them and promised Soviet raw material and energy sources in return. All this was heady stuff from the first Soviet Communist chief to visit West Germany; and it unquestionably marked another milestone for Mr. Brandt's Ostpolitik.

In the circumstances it may seem infelicitous to point out that Mr. Brandt was unable to extract from his genial guest the kind of specific acknowledgment of West Berlin's vital links to West Germany that he had hoped for. He failed even to obtain formal Soviet acquiescence in Bonn's right to represent West Berlin at the United Nations when both East and West Germany are admitted to membership this fall. Indeed, the word "Berlin" never appears in the 1,800-word communiqué.

All Mr. Brandt could get was a paragraph saying the two leaders "are agreed that the strict observation and full implementation" of the 1971 four-power agreement on Berlin are "a crucial prerequisite" for détente in Europe and better relations between the states concerned. In the four-power agreement, to be sure, the United States, Britain and France emphasize that the ties between West Berlin and West Germany "will be maintained and developed"; and in an annex, Moscow promises to "raise no objection" if Bonn represents West Berlin in international organizations and conferences. But the Soviet Union and East Germany always cite the part of that agreement that says West Berlin is not part of the Federal Republic and cannot be governed by Bonn.

Neither Russia nor East Germany has missed an opportunity for months to emphasize publicly the separate status of West Berlin and its separation from West Germany. East Germany is already insisting that Bonn cannot represent West Berlin at the United Nations. These may seem minor matters in the larger context of Soviet-German rapprochement and East-West détente; but they are precisely the kinds of issues on which the long-run survival of a free West Berlin depends.

At the peak of his power and prestige, Chancellor Brandt was in a strong position to insist that Mr. Brezhnev—as a condition of the economic assistance Moscow urgently seeks—make once and for all a clear commitment to respect the vital links between Bonn and West Berlin. Not only his political opponents in West Germany regret that he failed to do so.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Colson and the SEC

We know very little about what Charles W. (Chuck) Colson actually did in the White House. He has never been tied in very tightly to the Watergate mess, and while he has been vaguely associated from time to time with "dirty tricks" and "hatchet-work" of one sort or another, he left his job with Mr. Nixon last March to take up the practice of law in Washington with his contribution to the public weal still something of a mystery. As to his character and his cast of mind, however, we know more, thanks in large part to two documents, and what we know is richly revealing, in its way, of the style and attitudes and moral standards which, collectively, have contributed so heavily to the crisis now breaking over the head of the Nixon presidency. The first document consisted of an instruction last fall from Mr. Colson to the White House staff—paid servants, all, of the taxpayers—to devote 24 hours of every one of the final 71 days of last year's presidential campaign to nothing other than the re-election of the President; you may perhaps recall the part about "walking over his grandmother, if necessary" to achieve this end.

* * *

Now a second document offers us a glimpse of Chuck Colson, ex-White-House-aide-turned-lawyer, at work. Again we have the familiar rough talk. Again it has to do entirely with an entirely unprincipled transaction—this one involving the use of old White House connections to implant in an important post at a sensitive government agency an official who could be counted on to look favorably upon the interests of Mr. Colson's law clients. The plot, we are told by Mr. Colson's law firm, never materialized—none of the shady things associated with Mr. Colson ever seem to materialize. But the substance of the plot and the spirit which went into it are eloquently set forth in a memorandum which came into the hands of Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein of The Washington Post and which was published in that newspaper [and the International Herald Tribune]. The memorandum, dated April 19, 1973, was to Mr. Colson, from his law partner, Charles H. Morin, and the substance of the plot proposed by Mr. Morin was as follows:

Mr. Colson, using his old White House connections and his professed role in getting G. Bradford Cook the job of chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, was to mobilize pressure upon Mr. Cook to appoint King Mallory as general counsel of the SEC. The idea apparently was that Mr. Mallory would, thereafter, be in Mr. Colson's debt. Otherwise, for reasons unspecified, Mr. Morin feared that Mr. Cook, who has since resigned as SEC chairman, "may turn into a disaster for us." Mr. Cook said this week that he never was put under White House pressure—although a note in Mr. Colson's handwriting on the memo instructs another of his law partners to make an approach through Jerry Jones, presently handling recruitment at the White House. "I'll call Cook if necessary," Colson wrote, "but I think Jerry Jones could lock this one for us." In any case, Mr. Mallory, who said he was "outraged" by the whole idea, has not gotten the job. As for Mr. Colson, he said he really thought that even to bring the matter up was "making a big deal out of nothing."

So much for the substance. As for the spirit of this enterprise, it is nicely captured in one paragraph of the memorandum:

"I really think (wrote Mr. Morin) that if we want King's appointment to materialize we have got to lean on Brad and not just lightly recommend people. He ought to be reminded of how he got the job and how he almost did not get the job. This is one of the chips we really should pick up because it is a key job in the commission and one of extreme importance to us in representing our clients."

* * *

So there you have it: simple influence peddling, perhaps, and therefore not too different in essence from the Sherman Adams affair or the Truman "mess in Washington" of which Mr. Nixon made so much when he was running for Vice-President 21 years ago. But there is also something in this crude talk of "leaning on" people and of picking up "chips" and of the "extreme" importance of the matter at hand, which is almost uniquely the language of Watergate, Vesco and ITT. There is the same arrogance, and amorality, and insensitivity to public trust. And in the offhand, big-deal-out-of-nothing response when the question of propriety is raised, there is the same sense of no fixed principles—and thus no shame.

International Opinion

Rule Less, Reign More

Even King Hassan's opponents would acknowledge that he is Morocco's deftest politician. He starts with the advantage of being a monarch. And to some as being semi-divine. But to have stayed in power after two spectacular near-overthrows . . . and an insurrection last March is some tribute to survivability . . . Government supporters write in the newspapers of "a foreign conspiracy and internal plot." The reference was clearly to President Qadhafi of Libya. The Moroccan government's accusations would be more convincing if there were signs that the shocks of 1971 and 1972 had led King Hassan to fulfill his promises to rule less and reign more. His failure has been in not bringing the main opposition parties . . . into the government . . .

MADRID—The importance of the informal talks of the Spanish Ambassador in Paris with representatives of the Powers has been much exaggerated. These talks have simply shown the existence of the sympathy of Europe and its desire to aid in the realization of peace without taking any concrete form, because all the interested parties see that matters are not yet far enough advanced to propose peace.

WASHINGTON—The committee appointed by the American Iron and Steel Institute at the instigation of President Harding to study the question of the abolition of the 12-hour day in the steel industry has reported against immediate abolition. The grounds given are that to do so, say to shift to an 8-hour day, would increase production costs by 15 percent and would require the addition of 60,000 more employees.

'Let's Look at the Bright Side—Maybe It's Taking People's Minds Off Inflation'

Nixon's Historic Alibi

By James Reston

WASHINGTON.—President Nixon's latest explanation of his part in the Watergate scandal—which is quite different from his first two explanations—is that everything he did, or failed to do, was motivated by his concern for "national security."

In his mind it is probably true, and this is precisely the problem. In fact, it is the main theme of his political life. Whenever he has been charged with dubious political or executive decisions, he has always justified them on the ground that, right or wrong, they were done in the name of "national security."

Does he have constitutional authority to bomb Cambodia in order to keep the Lon Nol government in power, or carry out the nation's commitments under the Southeast Asia Treaty, or try to compel North Vietnam to abide by the cease-fire agreement in Indochina? The Congress questions that he does, but he bombs anyway in the name of "national security."

Was he fair in his savage attacks on Harry Truman and Dean Acheson, in questioning their motives in the Korean war? In his mind, he did it for "national security."

Old Nixon Story

It is a very old Nixon story. He came into politics vilifying Helen Gahagan Douglas and Jerry Voorhees as "pinkos," and he wanted the United States to intervene in the French Indochina war at Dien Bien Phu, and he fought everybody who thought it might be possible to arrange an accommodation with Peking and Moscow—all for the same reason. He thought he was fighting for "national security."

More than that, he still feels he can use any blunt instruments at his command to serve his own notion of national security today. His last statement on the Watergate was not a satisfactory explanation, or even a credible alibi, but a confession of wrongdoing, of losing control over the FBI, of executive negligence, and even of presidential knowledge and approval of bugging and burglary—all in the name of "national security."

It is very easy and dangerous to guess at his motives, for he has invited all kinds of dubious speculations, but his judgments are the main thing. Assuming the best of motives, he thought, by his own testimony, that in the name of "national security," he could tap telephones, even of his own staff, authorize burglaries, ignore the disclosures of the press and the questions of the Congress, urge his staff to defend the "national interest" against its enemies, and then pretend to be surprised if they bugged the Watergate or raided Ellsberg's psychiatrist's files.

He asked for loyalty from his staff, and he got it. He had a chance to get campaign finance reform and he opposed it. After his spectacular victory last November, he had a chance for reconciliation with his old adversaries and he refused it. After the facts began to come out on the Watergate scandal and he announced that he wanted all the facts to come out and that he was going to get at the bottom of the whole thing, he ducked direct questioning and put out what can only be called a mystifying clarification, which raised more questions than it answered.

What the nation obviously wanted and needed was a plain and honest statement of the facts from the President. What it has had from the President is one statement last August and one in October that he didn't know anything about the Watergate and nobody on his staff was involved, and then on April 17 of this year that maybe he had been misled by his own loyal public servants, and now, in summary, that he really did know a lot about the cover-up but that it was done in the name of "national security," which must still limit the investigation in the Senate and the courts.

"In citing these national security matters," he said, "it is not my intention to place a national security 'cover' on Watergate, but rather to separate them out from Watergate..."

But he is in fact putting on a cover. He is limiting the inquest. By his own testimony, he has created an atmosphere of fear, suspicion and hostility in the White House, which has infected not only the Haldemans and the Ehrlichmans and the Mitchells, but all the other minor characters in the tragedy.

"To the extent," the President said, "that I may in any way have contributed to the climate in which they [the illegal activities] took place, I did not intend to, to the extent that I failed to prevent them, I should have been more vigilant."

This is probably the most candid concession he has made in this whole tragedy, but he did not rest his case on this confession. He rested it, as he has done throughout his long and remarkable political career, on the proposition that, whatever he did was done for "national security."

And the tragedy is that more crimes and brutalities have been done in the name of "national security" in this country in the last quarter century than in the name of anything else, and Nixon is still falling back on this excuse, as he has done throughout his long career.

Watergate Crowd

Because of the number of people involved in the Watergate scandal it is very difficult for the people to understand how it all came about. The crux of the matter is that President Nixon set up a form of autocratic government in the White House that blew up and left in the wreckage some rotten timbers. In view of what has happened it seems unlikely that a future Republican or Democratic President will be tempted to establish any new police form of government with White House aides.

President Agnew?

Unless or until Spiro Agnew is tarred by the Watergate, Anthony Lewis (IHT, May 17) is not justified in calling for his resignation. No matter how depressing everyone finds the notion of a President Agnew.

Abel Green

Wonder how many people remember that Abel Green (IHT Obit, May 12-13) compiled "Fractured French" and "Compound Fractured French"? He also wrote the biography of Variety founder Sime Silverman—"Mr. Broadway"—a title which he himself inherited. Last week the "Celestial Tribune" must have announced the opening night of this genial and erudite man with the headline: "ABEL BOFFO IN GREEN PASTURES."

Flying Dog Story

Recently I flew to Malaga from Paris with my dog. Simple? No. First I had to buy a box for the dog—O.K.—I expect this, but I didn't expect to have to run around Le Bourget Airport trying to find a box, and when I did, to have to pay 80 francs for it. Problems over? No.

Now, although I had no personal baggage and 20 kilos supposedly free weight allowance, I was charged 28 kilos excess baggage for the dog plus the box. Total: 127 francs. So beware! Dog fare from Paris to Malaga "sans service" is 207 francs.

Watergateway To the World

By C. L. Sulzberger

LONDON.—It is generally considered that the next two or three weeks will be critical in demonstrating whether President Nixon is able to pursue his main foreign policy objectives along the conceptual lines hitherto followed, or whether administrative chaos produced by the Watergate scandal may start to paralyze U.S. initiatives.

As things stand at the end of May, the more prescient and unemotional observers abroad believe that American diplomacy may be expected to continue on a fundamentally sound and strong basis. Whether that will endure, however, depends on the unknown factor of the U.S. public and political mood.

Already it has become evident that Washington's effort to settle the Cambodian aspect of the Indochina war is gravely compromised. In his most recent Paris negotiations with Le Duc Tho, Henry Kissinger seems unquestionably to have been weakened and embarrassed on this issue.

Loses Trump Card

The Watergate mess itself was and is in no sense directly tied to Indochina. But the revolt against presidential authority, immensely inflamed by the bugging scandal and its ramifications, encouraged Congress to cut off funds to finance bombing in Cambodia. This removed from Kissinger's hand a valuable bargaining trump.

Although there have been hints of some improvement in the Indochina situation with respect to Laos and Vietnam, Cambodia appears in poor shape. There is no escape from what are euphemistically called "grim realities." Indeed, one might now say Washington's remaining hope is to delay an inevitable collapse of its position there.

But on other U.S. policy aspects, the debilitating influence of scandal hasn't yet made itself felt. On the Middle East there has been no slippage. Kissinger, who had long avoided personal involvement in the ticklish Arab-Israeli argument, has now become active in this diplomatic minefield. Moreover, Brezhnev and Nixon agree that new efforts must be made to reduce its explosive potential.

Momentum Generated

And there is every expectation the Brezhnev-Nixon talks will go off as foreseen, without a hitch, next month. All important discussion points have been agreed upon, and fundamental joint decisions regarding these have already been taken in preliminary negotiations.

Enough momentum had already been generated, with respect to the culmination of Soviet-Ame[rican] negotiations after four pai[ns]taking years of Nixon policy, [to] carry things on toward their [ex]pected conclusion. But there [is] no similar diplomatic moment[um] visible in terms of policy ini[tia]tives more recently launched [in] Washington.

Thus, while the "Year of [Eu]rope" is considered the Preside[nt's] primary objective for 1973 for[eign] policy, that "year" has not go[t] off to a booming start. Th[ere] is indeed every effort to s[...] the Atlantic relationship. I[t is] hoped this will reduce the re[...] competition for prestige am[ong] the Western allies, a prestige [...] depended more on their respe[ctive] relationships with Mosco[w and] Peking than with each othe[r].

This gave the two Commu[nist] capitals an inferential veto [...] the policies of several North [At]lantic partners. Now it is c[...] the Russians will always deal [...] with the strongest NATO mem[ber,] the United States. This fact h[...] cool off the intra-alliance c[om]petition and makes allied r[ela]tionships again more obvio[usly] important than adversary r[ela]tionships.

But just as these trends [be]came fully clear, the Water[gate] affair detonated. At a mom[ent] when Washington hoped to r[eap] the fruits of a carefully de[...] long-range policy, the Ame[rican] people and the American [...] system exploded over an [...] deep moral significance.

Power Battle

The trouble is that what be[gan] as what might properly be ca[lled] a sordid and ridiculous poli[tical] affair speedily assumed the s[...] of a furious concurrent p[ower] battle between an execu[tive] branch, exposed as confused [and] inept, and a legislative bra[nch] which had previously felt m[an]acled and confined. This stru[ggle] has developed with increas[ingly] fevered intensity as Waterg[ate's] own stain spreads.

Morally sound as the oppo[nents] of a tarnished White House [...] on the issues involved, their ef[forts] to curb and then reduce pr[esi]dential power on foreign [and] defense policy runs counter to [the] tide of current history. [...] could produce serious dangers.

Development of new and dre[ad]ful weapons plus instant c[om]munications have combined to [in]crease rather than decrease [the] strength of the executive in m[ost] important nations nowadays, emphasizing the frequent need [for] swift governmental decisions. [If,] as a consequence of disgust [with] recent White House behavior [we] reject contemporary histo[rical] logic, the United States—and [in]deed, the whole world—could [be] unbalanced.

Kissinger at Fifty

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON—Large, impersonal forces determined long ago that Henry A. Kissinger could not repeat the virtuoso performance he has put in on the world's stage during the past four years. So the bugging of his staff merely provides an ugly coda to an act that was playing out anyway.

But he has done some service to the state. As he marks his 50th birthday on Sunday, it is worth taking the measure of his achievement.

The achievement lies in the normalization of relations between this country on the one hand and China and Russia on the other. The immediate payoff is American exit from the war in Southeast Asia. The larger consequences are a transformation in the structure of world power as yet incalculable. It is a diplomatic accomplishment comparable in magnitude to the feats of Castlereagh and Bismarck.

Not Disparaging

It does not disparage that achievement to point out that it rested on three special conditions. For one thing, there was the position of President Nixon. As early as 1967, Mr. Nixon had clearly sensed the wisdom of trying to play off China against Russia. Whatever differences may have separated the President from his chief foreign policy adviser, Mr. Kissinger had total support for the central objective of a new approach to Peking and Moscow.

A second condition is that Mr. Kissinger was dealing with Communist regimes run from the top down. As the President's agent, it was possible to tie up secret agreements of a binding nature with a single foreign leader. When he engaged Premier Chou En-lai in China and First Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev in Russia, they could deliver the goods.

A third condition is that the web of ties between the United States and the two Communist giants was thin to nonexistent. Against this background, the making of a very few arrangements took on historic proportions. An exchange of diplomatic missions with Peking, a lid on strategic weapons—these were first steps in a journey marked by destiny.

New agreements with Russia and China will surely be made—perhaps in the very near future. But they will not be as dramatic. They will be building on a foundation already laid.

Diplomatic Shift

Moreover, now that communications with the Communist leaders have been opened, the center of diplomatic interest shifts elsewhere. Western Europe and Japan now exert the foremost claim to American attention.

But secret diplomacy at the summit cannot deliver those countries. For better or worse they are democracies, and foreign policy decisions have to be cleared with a broad reach of offi[cial] and interest groups. Econ[omic] issues of a messy technical na[ture] are involved. It is a case [of] needlepoint, not architectu[re].

Abundant signs already re[flect] the inevitable waning of the K[is]singer influence in these [cir]cumstances. The Europeans [and] Japanese have been cool, to [put] it mildly, to Mr. Kissinger's [...] that they subordinate immed[iate] economic interests to a [...] Atlantic charter. In this co[un]try he has been in[...] obliged to share forei[gn po]licy primacy with the econo[mists,] the Treasury, and the [profes]sionals at the State Depar[tment].

Would Split Pow[er]

None of this is lost on Mr. [Kis]singer. He has long been ta[lking] of institutionalizing the ex[traor]dinary powers concentrat[ed in one] person. It would have [made] sense for him, provided he [did] not become secretary of sta[te, to] bow out after about a y[ear of] favorable service. He would [have] left, covered with honors, an[d in] a position to serve other P[resi]dents.

So this 50th birthday sh[ould] have been a happy occasion. [It] is not, and the reason lies in Kissinger's part in the bug[ging] of his subordinates on [the] national security staff. Ma[ybe,] just maybe, there was a case [for] the bugging. But not on [the] plane argued by Mr. Kiss[inger.] When confronted with ques[tions] about what he did, he did [not] reply in a straightforward [way.] He offered evasions and outright lies.

So the achievement has [been] dimmed. The occasion is even tragic. For Mr. Kiss[inger] has not been betrayed by [ene]mies; still less, as he now s[eems] pleased to believe, by fri[ends.] He has been betrayed by [what] is false within.

Accord in Money Reform Talks

...NGTON, May 25 (AP-...rnational monetary re-...rts today completed a conference here with-...ing an agreement on outline for a new set to guide the world's system.

Mr. Morse told a press conference that the negotiations on monetary reforms have moved from the stage of "multilateral monologue" to effective debate and elucidation of the key issues.

He said that he does not expect any "consensus" to emerge on monetary reforms until the negotiations are further along.

The basic disagreement is over the "adjustment process." Most, if not all, of the other nations, have lined up solidly against U.S. Treasury Secretary George Shultz's proposal that gains or losses in reserves be used as a trigger to force changes in parity.

Under this system, a country with a "disproportionate" rise in reserves would be expected to revalue its currency. And if it did not it would be subject to international sanctions, including a surcharge on the imports from the country in chronic surplus.

The other countries argue that it is simplistic to rely on a single statistical indicator. But beyond that, they think the Shultz plan implies a yielding of national sovereignty. France has been the leader in resisting that part of the U.S. proposals.

The Europeans are said to be showing more agreement among themselves on some of the monetary reform issues, but generally have not accepted ideas advanced by the United States on techniques to be used in the exchange rate adjustment process.

However, there is general acceptance of the idea that the surplus nations have an obligation to take steps to bring their accounts into better balance. The U.S. thinks that this agreement in principle is a step forward, but a long, painful negotiation to develop the mechanics for accomplishing this goal seems in prospect.

Mr. Morse said that the higher-ranking C-20 policy-making group possibly may meet at the end of July, perhaps early in September or possibly not until the Nairobi meeting of the IMF. He indicated that C-20 deputies need to hold further talks before a decision will be reached on the ministerial-level meeting.

BankAmerica, Mellon Increase Prime Rate

SAN FRANCISCO, May 25 (Reuters).—Bank of America today increased its prime rate to 7 1/4 percent from 7 percent, effective immediately.

In Pittsburgh, Mellon Bank also said it is increasing its prime rate to 7 1/4 percent.

Other big banks increased the rate yesterday.

Chase in W. Germany

DUESSELDORF, West Germany, May 25 (AP-DJ).—Chase Manhattan Bank has formed a West German subsidiary, Familienbank AG, that will begin banking operations this year in Duesseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Munich and Stuttgart, the bank announced today.

2 Banks Sign Venture Pact With Romania

Aim Will Be to Finance Trade and Investment

BUCHAREST, May 25 (AP-DJ).—An Anglo-American banking combination today signed an agreement with the Romanian Bank for Foreign Trade setting up a jointly-owned bank to finance trade and foreign investment in Romania.

The new bank will be called the Anglo-Romanian Bank. It will be owned 50 percent by the Romanian Bank for Foreign Trade, 30 percent by Barclays Bank and 20 percent by Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. The bank is to start operations in July.

Before the signing ceremony, Gabriel Hauge, chairman of Manufacturers Hanover Trust, said the bank will start by financing normal trade operations.

But he said the Romanian minister of finance has agreed to provide him in the near future with a "select list" of Romanian industries which could provide opportunities for collaboration with U.S. companies.

Joint Ventures Seen

Mr. Hauge said he would bring these opportunities to the attention of his bank's corporate clients "which include most of America's major industries," and they will send teams of executives to Romania to explore possible joint ventures. The new bank will help finance such ventures.

Romania recently passed legislation unique in the Communist bloc allowing foreign companies to own up to 50 percent of joint ventures with Romanian institutions on reasonably liberal terms.

One U.S. firm, Control Data Corp., has set up a jointly-owned venture to make computer software under the law. Representatives of Johns Manville Corp. were in Romania this week discussing possible collaboration.

Mr. Hauge said he guessed other companies will follow suit. He said in a meeting with Romania's Premier Ion Maurer today that he got the impression that the Romanian leadership understands that "American companies will go where they feel they are welcome."

Italian Deficit In Payments

ROME, May 25 (AP-DJ).—Italy's balance of payments was in deficit by 382.6 billion lire ($637.7 million) in January, compared with a surplus of 12.5 billion lire a year earlier, the Bank of Italy announced today. In December 1972, there was a deficit of 252.9 billion lire.

Of the total deficit in January, 79.3 billion lire was accounted for by losses on the current account, compared with a deficit in December of 350.7 billion. In January 1972, there was a surplus of 122.9 billion lire.

Capital movements in January were in deficit by 220.4 billion lire, compared with a December deficit of 54.4 billion and a January 1972 deficit of 325.6 billion lire.

The deficit on capital movements was due entirely to private transfers, which were in deficit by 227.6 billion lire, compared with 95.4 billion lire a year ago.

Official or government transfers were in surplus by 7.2 billion lire compared with a year-earlier deficit of 140.2 billion lire.

The miscellaneous heading was in deficit by 82.9 billion lire, compared with a surplus of 152.2 billion in December and a surplus of 125.2 billion lire a year earlier.

This heading includes mostly travel and tourism. Its drop into deficit from a long string of surpluses surprised observers.

Japan Plans to Fight Inflation By Tightening Money Supply

TOKYO, May 25 (AP-DJ).—Japanese cabinet ministers concerned with economic affairs agreed today to dampen overall demand by tightening monetary and fiscal policies.

Officials at the Economic Planning Agency said the ministers agreed that the battle against rising prices is the most important issue facing the government.

The Bank of Japan's policy board also met today but failed to make any decisions. Sources explained that a decision to raise the official discount rate is difficult to take while proceedings in the Diet are still suspended over an election-law dispute between the governing and opposition parties.

The cabinet-level meeting also discussed the possibility of further cutbacks or postponements in government spending, curbs on capital investment by the auto industry, the supply-demand relationships of steel, cement and timber, and the possibility of combating soaring construction prices by selling government-built houses at less than cost.

Meanwhile the government said today that the Tokyo consumer price index for May showed the sharpest gain from a year-earlier level in over 19 years.

The May index (1970 equals 100) was provisionally put at 124.0, up 11.6 percent from the preceding year and up 2.1 percent from the preceding month.

It was also announced that the consumer price index (1970 equals 100) for all of Japan was 120.7 in April, up 1.9 percent from March and up 9.4 percent from a year earlier.

The sharp advances of both indexes were attributed primarily to food and clothing price increases. Publication of the national index usually lags behind the Tokyo index by about one month.

Dollar Improves As Gold Declines On Quiet Markets

LONDON, May 25 (AP).—Europe's currency markets closed out two hectic weeks today on a relatively calm note, with the dollar on a trend toward improvement and gold prices falling.

The dollar, solidly assisted by the announcement in Washington yesterday of America's first foreign trade surplus in 18 months, improved in London, Paris, Zurich and Frankfurt.

In London, the dollar closed at a rate of $2.5405 to the pound, compared with $2.5480 at yesterday's close. At one point today it was being traded at $2.5335.

In Frankfurt, the dollar closed at 2.76 marks, compared with 2.7545 yesterday. On the Paris free market, the dollar improved from 4.4125 to 4.4250 francs. In Switzerland, the dollar rose to 3.1215 francs, from 3.0935 yesterday.

Gold closed at $106.25 an ounce in London and $106.50 in Zurich, down more than $3 from yesterday's close at both points. At one point today gold was being sold for $104.75 in London.

The closing prices were about $6 down from the record highs hit Monday and a week ago, after gold first broke the $100 price barrier to start the latest flurry of currency market activity.

Financial News and Notes

BP to Sell BP Italiana Shares

British Petroleum Co. will sell the shares of BP Italiana SpA to Oil Chemicals & Transport Finance Corp. SA. BP also plans to sell its 49 percent interest in Industria Raffinazione Oli Minerali to Oil Chemicals. Total price for the acquisitions is more than £80 million, but BP will receive only about £40 million because of the need to pay off liabilities of BP Italiana. Oil Chemicals is owned by an international consortium organized by the Monti group of Italy. BP says it is selling the Italian properties because oil trading conditions in Italy have been unsatisfactory for some time.

U.S. Plane Firms Eye Europe

United Aircraft Corp. is actively exploring the possibility of a joint development program for its new JT10D commercial air transport engine with several potential international partners. Officials of United's Pratt & Whitney division decline to identify any of the companies involved in the discussions, but trade reports have named Motoren- und Turbinen-Union of Munich, and Fiat as the two firms actively interested. Rolls-Royce (1971) Ltd. is also said to be discussing the possibility of joining the program. Meanwhile William Rockwell, chairman of Rockwell International Corp., says his company has been invited to participate in the Concorde supersonic airliner program. However, he says no concrete proposal has yet been received. Further talks with British Aircraft Corp. are scheduled for July, he says.

France Orders GE Atomic Reactors

Electricité de France, the national power company, has awarded tentatively a contract to Cie. Générale d'Electricité (CGE) for the construction of two 995 megawatt atomic power plants. CGE is a licensee of General Electric Co., the U.S. builder of boiling water reactors. Hitherto, all contracts by Electricité de France for atomic power plants have been given to Creusot-Loire, the French licensee of Westinghouse Electric Corp., a pioneer of the pressurized water reactor system. Electricité de France says the two contracts will be confirmed after additional talks on CGE's relations with GE and CGE's ambitions as a nuclear power plant builder in other European countries.

Nissan Expects Foreign Sales Rise

Nissan Motor Co. expects its car sales in the United States and Canada to rise 50 percent and in Europe 25 percent in the next five years from current levels Hamiru Saku, executive managing director, reports. He says that last year Nissan sold about 320,000 cars in the United States and Canada, and some 147,000 cars in Europe. Mr. Saku predicts a rise of about 10 percent in car sales for Nissan for the current year.

Earnings Said Overstated by $2 Million

N.Y. Stockbroker Charged With Fraud

NEW YORK, May 25 (AP-DJ).—In potentially the biggest U.S. brokerage-house debacle since the crisis days of 1970, the government-sponsored investors insurance fund has asked a federal court in New York for authority to liquidate Weis Securities Inc., a New York Stock Exchange member firm with 43,000 customer accounts, 400 salesmen and 27 branch offices.

The move by the Securities Investor Protection Corp. (SIPC) coincided with papers filed in the same court by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) charging Weis and five key officers with fraud and violations of various capital, bookkeeping and financial responsibility rules. Essentially, the SEC alleged that Weis for the past year has been overstating earnings and net worth by $2 million each to mask a deteriorating financial situation.

In the wake of the SIPC-SEC moves, Weis was suspended by the Big Board, the American Stock Exchange, the Midwest Stock Exchange, the New York Cotton Exchange and National Clearing Corp. The latter is the securities-cash settlement arm of the over-the-counter industry.

[Today the presiding federal judge said he will sign a temporary restraining order freezing the operations of Weis, Reuters reported.

[The decision came after the SEC said it "estimated in the neighborhood of $6 million is needed to resuscitate the fortune of Weis," and that falsified records "made it virtually impossible to know the actual financial status of the firm."]

If the court appoints a trustee, it will mark the first time since SIPC was formed in January, 1971, that a Big Board member firm has been liquidated by the agency, which is backed by industry and government funds and provides limited insurance to customers of financially troubled brokerage houses.

However, investors would be faced with months of waiting while claims were processed and securities and cash returned. They would lose for that time the use of those assets they had left with the brokerage houses.

In addition to naming the firm, the SEC also levied fraud charges and other allegations against Arthur Levine, Weis chairman; Sol Leit, president; Alan Solomon, a vice-president; Robert Lynn, controller, and Joel Kubie, the former controller.

The Weis firm is not connected with any of six New York-area securities firms whose titles include the name "Weiss."

The SEC charged the five men and the firm with fraud in that they allegedly falsified financial reports to inflate earnings statements presented to lending banks, subordinated lenders, customers and employees who purchased stock in the firm.

The firm was also charged with maintaining inadequate books and records, maintaining insufficient reserves to protect customers under SEC rules and violating the Big Board's net capital rule, which requires that a firm's debt cannot exceed 15 times its liquid capital. The five officers were charged with aiding and abetting the firm in those alleged wrongdoings.

The firm declined comment and none of the individuals could be reached.

U.S. to Keep Dividend Curb

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AP-DJ).—The Nixon administration has considered—but rejected for the present—the idea of relaxing the current voluntary restriction on corporate dividend increases.

The guideline administered by the Committee on Interest and Dividends limits increases in corporate dividends to 4 percent a year.

Sources confirmed reports that a relaxation of the rule to permit increases of 5 or 5.5 percent had been discussed by the committee headed by Federal Reserve Board chairman Arthur Burns. But they said the question is not under active consideration at present.

One source said he would not flatly rule out a change in the future, but action is not imminent.

Yesterday the Associated Press reported the administration was considering easing its voluntary guidelines.

The report added that a Treasury official said the matter has been under discussion for six months, and to suggest any change now is premature.

Prices Climb On Big Board For 3d Day

Despite News of Denial Of Dividend Report

By Terry Robards

NEW YORK, May 25 (NYT).—The stock market withstood a spate of profit-taking this morning and racked up another solid advance for the third day in a row on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow Jones industrial average, down 3.46 at 11 a.m., rebounded and closed with a gain of 6.40 at 930.84. The Dow's advance for the week came to 35.67, the best gain in nearly seven months.

Volume on the NYSE was heavy for a change, totaling 19.27 million shares, up sharply from 17.31 million yesterday and far above the average in recent months.

The general market actually was much stronger than the Dow. A total of 1,141 stocks closed with gains, down only slightly from the 1,187 that closed higher yesterday when the Dow soared 29.42 in its fourth-largest advance in history.

As is customary following a day of extraordinary price swings, today's market consisted mainly of reactions to yesterday's big gains. Many analysts were encouraged by the market's ability to withstand profit-taking and post further advances.

Weakness has been a characteristic of Friday markets in recent months, reflecting a reluctance in Wall Street to remain invested over a weekend. Today's strength was all the more encouraging since it occurred prior to a three-day holiday.

Some of yesterday's advance was sparked by a report from Washington that the Nixon administration is considering a relaxation of its restrictions on dividend increases. Today, official sources said no such relaxation is imminent.

Certain-Teed products did not open for trading. A company spokesman said the Securities and Exchange Commission requested that the company disclose the number of shares it has purchased from its stockholders in a tender offer that expired yesterday.

Prices moved higher in moderate trading on the American Stock Exchange. The Amex index picked up 0.19 to 22.76, while advances topped declines, 752 against 217. Turnover was 4.14 million shares, compared with 3.32 million yesterday.

Gold stocks generally lost a point or more following a decline in the price of bullion in London.

How to place your portfolio under investment management starting with $10,000 or more

If you have saved or acquired $10,000 or more in cash or securities, you naturally want to make your capital grow. Yet you may feel you are actually losing ground due to inflation and taxes, or perhaps to a lack of time for investment decisions.

To help solve this problem, clients in 64 countries have turned to The Danforth Associates Investment Management, a tested plan originally developed by a Boston family to manage its own common stock investments.

The plan thus far has proved, we believe, especially efficient in providing continuing capital growth supervision for portfolios starting with $10,000 or more — though, as in any selection of investments, losses do and will occur.

For a complimentary copy of a 42-page report describing this tested plan, its complete 15-year "performance record," and how it may help you now, simply write Dept. Z.21.

Resolutions relating to the above matters will be adopted by a simple majority of votes cast. Each share present or represented by proxy at the Meeting will be entitled to one vote. However, no single shareholder or proxyholder may vote more than 20% of the Corporation's total issued and outstanding shares or more than 40% of the shares present or represented by proxy.

In addition, following the Annual Meeting an Extraordinary General Meeting will be called to consider:
a change of Article 3bis of the Articles of Incorporation, which reads as follows:
„The Corporation has to appoint a banking institution with a capital and reserves of no less than five million US-Dollars (US$ 5,000,000) or equivalent as custodian of all stock and cash of the Corporation" which is to be deleted and replaced by the following formulation:
„The Corporation has to appoint a banking institution as custodian of securities and cash of the Corporation with a paid-in capital and reserves as prescribed by German and Luxembourg regulations for banking institutions which act as custodians for investment companies."

Under Luxembourg law, action may be taken on the above resolution only in the event that at least 50% of the issued and outstanding shares of the Corporation are present or represented by proxy at the Meeting. If such quorum requirement is met, the amendments will be adopted by a majority of two-thirds of the shares voted. Each share will be entitled to one vote.

Registered shareholders of record as at the close of business on June 1, 1973, will be admitted to the Meeting. Holders of bearer shares who deposit such shares with Kredietbank S.A. Luxembourgeoise, 37 rue Notre-Dame, Luxembourg, or with any other bank or banking institution, and furnish evidence of such deposit to the Corporation at or before the opening of the Meeting will also be admitted. Bearer shares so deposited must remain on deposit through the close of the Meeting or any adjournment thereof and evidence of the deposit must so specify.

Shareholders who wish to be represented by proxy at the Meeting may obtain forms of proxy by writing to the Corporation c/o Hoogewerf & Cie., 43, rue Goethe, Luxembourg City.

A form of proxy will be mailed to each registered shareholder at his address of record with the Corporation.

The Board of Directors.

(First and Second Series)

Notice to Holders of Warrants "B"

Holders of warrants "B" who wish to exercise their entitlements to purchase shares of Societa Generale Immobiliare on the next June exercise date are invited to surrender such warrants to Banca d'America e d'Italia, Largo Tritone 161, Rome office, on or before 15th June 1973.

Each warrant entitles the bearer to receive against payment of U.S. $250:

250 shares of Societa Generale Immobiliare of Lire 250 nominal each, ranking pari passu with existing shares, and a cash payment of Lire 5 per each such share: and

30.855855 shares of Societa Generale Immobiliare, and a cash payment of Lire 10 in respect of each 30.855855 shares.

Holders of 4 or more warrants are, alternatively, entitled to effect payment by surrender of U.S. $1,000 nominal of the above mentioned bonds, for each 4 warrants held.

UNION MINIERE

1972 ANNUAL REPORT

Highlights

- Profit and proposed dividend in progression.
- Canada: underground development of the Thierry deposit.
- Very interesting discoveries and concentration of our prospecting efforts, i.e. in Australia.
- Expansion of the areas of our prospecting activities in Europe (Spain & Belgium).
- New investments in the nonferrous metal sector; particularly in the metal-working and manufacturing field in Belgium.

Main figures

- Net profit for the year 1972: BF 960 million (as against BF 835 million in 1971).
- Recommended dividend: BF 800 net per whole share or BF 80 per tenth share (as against BF 750 and BF 75 in 1971).
- Balance to be carried forward: BF 50,378,563.
- Total of the credit of the Profit and Loss Account (main resources of the company): BF 1,769,727,807 as against BF 2,193,934,144 in 1971.
- On the liabilities side of the Balance Sheet.
  + Transfer to the "Assets Replacement Reserve" (by debiting the Profit and Loss Account) credited in 1972 with BF 600 million (total at the end of 1972: BF 3,000 million) as against BF 2,400 million in 1971.
  + Contingencies reserve: BF 3,924,880,949.
- On the assets side of the Balance Sheet.
  + Under fixed assets: we note increased participations amounting to BF 4,399,869,691 as against BF 4,316,657,925 in 1971.
    (On the basis of the quotations ruling at the end of the year, the market value of quoted investments showed a surplus over book value of BF 2,808 million).
  + Under current assets, we note that metals and other products increased to BF 1,858,711,127 as against BF 1,053,339,491 in 1971. (We took advantage of the particularly depressed copper price during the financial year to purchase a certain tonnage of the metal.) Short-term investments increased to BF 3,000,613,766 as against BF 2,668,649,598 in 1971. Based on prices at the end of the financial year, the overall market value of quoted shares exceeded their book value by BF 224,000,000.

REGIMENT OF WOMEN

By Thomas Berger. Simon & Schuster. 349 pp. $8.9

Reviewed by Leo Braudy

TWENTY-NINE-YEAR-OLD Georgie Cornell, the hero of Thomas Berger's new novel, was born in 2096 and lives in New York City. His psychiatrist, Dr. Prine, wears a self-adhesive nylon beard and has been treating Georgie for frigidity with a dildo, while she tells him his complaint that it hurts is merely a "defense"—as Dr. Daisy Rudin explained so well in her new book on the superiority of the anal orgasm, recently published by the giant firm where Georgie works as a secretary.

Through such details of satiric reversal, parallel and extension, Berger first sketches in the background of his future America. The novel's title is taken from John Knox's 1558 attack on "Bloody" Mary Tudor, "The First Blast of the Trumpet Against the Monstrous Regiment of Women," and quotations from Knox, Martin Luther, Christabel Pankhurst, Grover Cleveland, Olive Schreiner, Confucius, Virginia Woolf and others, including a final comment from Friedrich Nietzsche ("Woman was God's second mistake"), preface each chapter.

Georgie Cornell's America is governed entirely by women ("regiment" in Knox's title means "rule"). The women of 2125 haven't done very much better than the ruling men of today. The city and the society in "Regiment of Women" are basically chaotic and inefficient rather than inhumane or totalitarian. The George Washington Bridge collapsed years before into the Hudson Sewer during a rainstorm, and the general decay of 22d-century America seeps into every part of the novel. Unlike the antiseptic dreams or nightmares of the future usually displayed in science-fiction novels, the atmosphere of "Regiment of Women" is incredibly seedy.

To paste up a collage of the details of "Regiment of Women" falsifies the actual effect of the novel, which convinces almost in spite of the details.

Berger's imaginative power makes us live in Georgie Cornell's reality until it becomes our norm, and the arbitrary rigidity of the sex roles in Georgie's world makes us aware not of our "normality," but of our own arbitrary distinctions. There is more compassion than bitterness in "Regiment of Women." Berger's subject is not so much the specific nature of sexual roles as the categorical severity with which roles are enforced and deviations punished. The decay of Georgie Cornell's America implies that the more politically and socially fragile a society, the more severely it attempts to police and define individual nature.

Berger's settings and characters in all his novels are plausible rather than apocalytic. His satire refuses to make an alliance between reader and author against an oppressive, ugly "them." Paul Krassner once wrote that "the ultimate object of satire is its own audience," and Berger's integrity arranges that no reader—male chauvinist, militant fe[...] or in between—can emerge [...] "Regiment of Women" unsc[...]

Garcia of Venezuela, the only pro who ever beat Norton. (He stopped Norton in 1970 with a punch that Norton's handlers say was thrown after the bell ending the seventh round.)

Then occurred one of those amusing accidents that relieve the gray monotony of a matchmaker's existence. In Caracas last Monday, Garcia was set upon by a New York character named Joe Alexander who usually works as a sparring partner, and was rendered obsolete in the first round. When word of this reached Terrell, he advised Brenner that he was available as a substitute for Garcia.

Brenner knew, though the general public did not, that after shadowboxing with the muse for three years, Terrell had turned back from the musical stage to the ring and won seven straight, including a sixth-round knockout of Garcia in Caracas last October. However, Teddy is prejudiced in favor of matches that draw customers, and even at Ernie's peak his admirers seldom unhitched the horses and pulled his carriage through the streets.

"Thanks," Brenner said. In effect, "get lost."

"The fans'll pay when the champion fights the contenders. Look at Frazier-Ali, there wasn't no disappointed fan anywhere in the world to be found. But it's no fun watching the Yankees playing a women's softball team."

He meant the White Sox. For the Yankees, the match wouldn't be all that bad.

Nicklaus Ties For Lead in Atlanta Golf

By Lincoln A. Werden

ATLANTA, May 25 (NYT).—Jack Nicklaus, an absentee at the last four tournaments, was back in action yesterday with a 67 for a share of the lead in the $150,000 Atlanta Golf Tournament.

With birdies on the last two holes, Nicklaus went five under par to tie Dave Glenz, 24, a tour sophomore from Coquille, Ore., and Benson (Mac) McLendon of Birmingham, Ala.

Nicklaus demonstrated the accuracy and control necessary on the Atlanta Country Club's rugged 6,883-yard course. A golfer here has to avoid trees along the fairways and numerous water hazards while enduring a constant climb uphill, especially on the front nine.

"I drove and played well," Nicklaus said. "I came up with the right shots when I needed them. This is a position course and it was a tough day to play with the shifting winds. You had to guess which way the wind was blowing when you hit."

Nicklaus began at the 10th hole. He holed a birdie there and added another at the picturesque par-3 13th, a hole with a waterfall. At the 17th, he ran in a three-footer for his third birdie. At the 18th, his second shot fell into a pond. He took a penalty stroke, dropped another ball, pitched within 10 feet of the cup and sank the putt for a par 4 to be out in 33.

On the other nine, Nicklaus was bunkered for a bogey at the third after a birdie at the par-5 second. Then he made a birdie at the par-5 eighth and ran in a six-foot putt for his sixth birdie, a 3, at the ninth to finish the half in 34.

Two rookies, Tom Kite of Austin, Texas, and Bruce Ashworth, 25, from Las Vegas, were with Hubert Green at 68. Dave Hill, the Memphis winner last Sunday, Rod Funseth and Larry Wise were at 69.

Gary Player of South Africa, in his first American tournament this year, carded a 76. "I don't think I have putted so badly in seven years."

Tom Weiskopf, winner of the Colonial at Fort Worth two weeks ago, scored the tour's 10th hole-in-one. He sank his tee shot with a No. 9 iron at the 135-yard 13th. Weiskopf had a 70.

In French Tennis Tourney

Swede, 16, Upsets Cliff Richey

PARIS, May 25 (AP).—Bjorn Borg, a 16-year-old Swede, upset America's Cliff Richey, 6-2, 6-3, with a remarkable display of tennis skill today in the French Open championship.

Richey, the 26-year-old World Championship Tennis star from Sarasota, Fla., consistently was outshot and outmaneuvered on the slow clay center court of the Roland Garros Stadium.

Borg's victory came at the end of a day of upsets. Stan Smith, the title favorite from Sea Pines, S.C., fought his way grimly out of a tight corner to beat Georges Goven of France, 2-6, 6-1, 6-3. But two other seeded stars were toppled.

Guillermo Vilas, a 19-year-old Argentinian left-hander dethroned defending champion Andres Gimeno of Spain, 6-2, 5-7, 6-4. Milan Holecek of Czechoslovakia humbled John Newcombe of Australia, 7-5, 6-1. Newcombe, three-time Wimbledon winner and this year's Australian champion, seldom has been so outplayed.

The first round of 64 matches finally was completed after three days of cut and thrust. Of the 17 Americans who set out in the men's singles of the $135,000 tournament, 11 won through to the second round.

Borg, a long-haired blond who used a double-handed grip for backhand shots, lived up to his reputation as the world's most promising junior.

At first, Richey could make nothing of him at all. The Swede bounded about his baseline, splaying shots all over the court, varying the pace from stroke to stroke, and building a 4-0 lead. Richey then held his services, but lost the set 2-6.

In the third game of the second set, Borg clipped the lines with a series of beautifully placed shots and broke service once more. The Swede held services to lead, 5-3, and then, with all the maturity of a seasoned player, finished the match off in style.

Richey trailed, 15-30, on his service. Borg suddenly caught him flat-footed with a dainty stop volley and moved to match point. Then he completed the job with a cool backhand pass.

Earlier, the crowd thought they were going to see Smith beaten. Goven ran up a 4-0 lead in the first set and Smith looked very unlike a man who has won $150,000 in prize money this year.

Slowly Smith came to terms with the slow surface. The match began to turn in his favor when he leaped high to cut off a lob and smashed his way to a service break at 2-1 in the second set. Smith reeled off six games in a row to win that set.

Arthur Ashe Wins

Besides Smith, two Americans won today's first-round matches. Arthur Ashe beat veteran Hungarian Istvan Gulyas, 6-4, 6-4, and Brian Gottfried came from behind to defeat Jan Kukal of Czechoslovakia, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

From the third round, matches revert to the traditional five-set pattern.

Meanwhile, two Americans reached the third round of the women's singles. Mrs. Nancy Gunter won a 2 1/2-hour baseline battle against Laura Rossouw of South Africa, 6-3, 5-7, 7-5. Miss Rossouw was attacked by cramp in both legs when leading, 4-2, in the final set and was in pain during the last stages of the match.

Pat Bostrom, 22, a graduate from the University of Washington at Seattle, defeat Britain's Jackie Fayter, 6-4, 2-6, 6-2.

The top seeds in the women's singles, Chris Evert and Margaret Court, had a rest day. Both are due to play their second-round matches tomorrow—Miss Evert against Hideko Goto of Japan and Mrs. Court against Patti Coleman of Australia.

Australians Qualify

CHINGFORD, England, May 25 (UPI).—Australians qualified for both the men's and women's singles finals today at the Rothmans Hard Court Tennis Tournament.

Owen Davidson, 29-year-old former coach to the British Davis Cup team and fresh from a year's coaching in Texas, beat Norman Holmes of Melbourne, Fla., 6-2, 6-1, in his semifinal.

The Australian's opponent in tomorrow's final is 18-year-old Rhodesian Colin Dowdeswell, a 6-4, 6-4 winner over Britain's Mike Collins.

In the women's singles, 16-year-old Australian Dianne Fromholtz reached the final for the second successive tournament and will be opposed tomorrow by South African Ilena Kloss, 17.

UNESCO Chooses Stan Smith As Fair-Play-Award Recipient

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., May 25 (UPI).—Stan Smith, captain of last year's U.S. Davis Cup team, will receive the 1972 fair play award of the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in a Paris ceremony Tuesday, it was announced today.

Smith will be given the Pierre de Coubertin award for his self-controlled and correct conduct during a tennis match at Bucharest last October, in which the United States defeated the Romanian team, 3-2, before a hostile crowd and despite scoring irregularities and aggressive behavior by his opponent.

Smith was picked by an international award committee headed by Jean Borotra, the veteran French tennis champion. The presentation ceremony was scheduled at UNESCO House, Paris, where John E. Fobes, deputy director-general of the specialized UN agency, will present trophies.

Senators Focus on Dilemma of Swimmers

By William N. Wallace

WASHINGTON, May 25 (NYT).—The impending trip to China by a United States swimming team on a tour sponsored by the State Department—and the athletes' certain suspension as a result by the Amateur Athletic Union—was the focal point of yesterday's Senate hearing on proposed sports legislation.

The 10 swimmers, including four 1972 Olympians—three of them gold medalists—will leave for a three-week trip Monday. They accept as fact that the AAU will suspend them because China is not a member of the International Swimming Federation, or FINA, which has a rule forbidding competitions, exhibitions or clinics between member and nonmember nations.

And if the AAU does not suspend the 10 swimmers, the AAU itself would be suspended from FINA, causing 80 to 90 American swimmers to be ineligible for the first world championships at Belgrade this year.

The situation caused Sen. John V. Tunney, D., Calif., to shake his head in dismay and Sen. James Pearson, R., Kan., to say, "I wish I had a penny for every time I've heard the words 'rules and regulations' here." Tunney was the chairman of the Commerce Committee hearings, which concluded yesterday.

Too Many Rules

Too many rules and regulations and too little consideration for the athletes have made the senators determined to bring federal intervention into amateur sports.

"This (swimming) situation is ridiculous," Tunney said to Ollan Cassell, the executive secretary of the AAU, and to David Rivenes, its president. Both were hard pressed by Sen. Tunney and Pearson, as was Walter Byers, executive director of the rival National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Tunney suggested that Harold Hennings of Chicago, the president of FINA and the only American heading an international sports federation, be asked to make an exception for the China-bound swimmers.

Henning, reached by telephone, said that it would be impossible, that the FINA's 103 members had three times recently reaffirmed their rule.

"It's come down to an international political situation," Henning said. "We have invited the People's Republic of China to rejoin FINA," he said. "But they won't unless Taiwan resigns. And Taiwan isn't resigning. We're not the United Nations."

Miami Gives Girl Athletes Scholarships

CORAL GABLES, Fla., May 25 (NYT).—The University of Miami has awarded five athletic scholarships to women during the past two weeks and has 10 more to give to women high school graduates able to enter the Miami freshman class next fall.

It is considered to be the first time a college with such a big-time athletic stature has given an athletic grant to a woman. Certainly no other big-time sports college has offered 15 women's athletic scholarships in one year.

Lynn Gienieczko, a 17-year-old Woodbrige, N.J., High School swimmer, will receive one of the scholarships. She signed a letter of intent with Miami in the offices of the College Athletic Placement Service in Oakhurst, N.J.

Miss Gienieczko, also known as Lynn Genesko, will have a full-tuition scholarship worth $2,400 a year. She must pay for her room and board and books. That can amount to between $700 and $800 a year.

The first woman to receive a Miami athletic grant was Terry Williams, a young golfer from Homestead, Fla. The other three women to get scholarships are swimmers: Jennifer Bartz of Santa Clara, Calif., who finished fourth in the individual medley at the 1972 Olympic Games; Nancy Kirkpatrick, a backstroke swimmer also from Santa Clara, and Nina Macinis, a butterfly specialist from Sunnyville, Calif.

Lynn was lucky to be born so young. A year ago Miami wasn't giving away women's athletic scholarships. The change was made last January when the Miami Board of Trustees, hoping to bolster its women's intercollegiate athletic program, instituted the 15 scholarships.

Art Buchwald

The Game Plan

WASHINGTON.—My friend Moonslinger is a skeptic by nature and the other day as we were having a drink together at the Press Club he said: "Nixon's credibility has reached a new low. You don't know what to believe anymore."

"I always believe the President of the United States. That's how I was brought up."

Buchwald

"Yeah, but this is different. Every day you read the paper witnesses say Nixon knew more about the Watergate than he did the day before."

"We used to have a saying in France," I told Moonslinger, 'Honi soit qui mal y pense' which means 'Evil to him who thinks evil.'"

"Don't you have it anymore?" Moonslinger asked.

"Not since Pompidou was elected."

"Well, anyway," he persisted, "what worries me is that if we can't believe the President on the Watergate, how can we believe him on Vietnam? For example, how can we be sure that we have 'peace with honor'?"

I said angrily: "The President would never lie to us about something like that."

"But suppose, just suppose, there isn't any 'peace with honor' there and the South Vietnamese and North Vietnamese are still fighting?"

"Impossible," I said. "After ten long years we have achieved a peace in Indochina that everyone can live with."

"But let's say, just for argument's sake, that something went wrong. Suppose after Kissinger's meeting in Paris with Le Duc Tho, the President goes on the air and says he has just received new information that we don't have 'peace with honor' in Vietnam? Will the American people believe him?"

"Of course they will."

"All right, let's go one step further," Moonslinger said. "Suppose he says because of this new information he will be obligated to start bombing North Vietnam again because he doesn't want to be the first impeached President in the history of the United States to lose a war?"

"Then the American people will have to support him, unless, of course, you want Cambodia to fall."

"Nobody wants Cambodia to fall," Moonslinger said. "But because of the President's credibility problem, many Americans may not believe him when he says he has to bomb again. This could bring the students and anti-war demonstrators out into the streets."

"That's where the President likes them," I said. "He wants his enemies out there in the streets where he can see them."

"Okay, then you have demonstrations, riots, arrests and Jane Fonda. The President declares a national emergency and, whammo, everyone forgets about Watergate."

"Moonslinger, are you trying to tell me the President would bomb North Vietnam to take our minds off a domestic scandal in his own administration?"

"Why not? What has he got to lose?"

"It's too farfetched," I said adamantly.

"Any more farfetched than the White House breaking into Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office with equipment loaned to them by the CIA?"

"That's different," I said. "The President had no choice."

"All I can tell you is when Nixon goes on the air in a few weeks and says, 'My fellow Americans,' the North Vietnamese had better head for their bomb shelters."

"Moonslinger," I said, "the trouble with you is that just because of a third-rate burglary at the Watergate you've lost your faith in the leaders of our land."

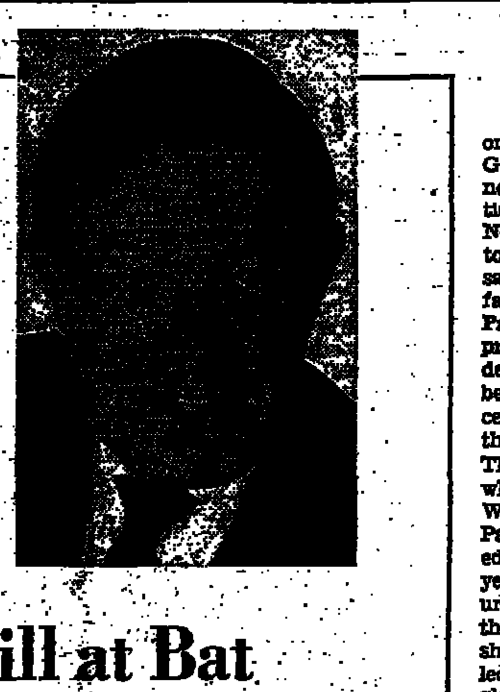
A Pagan Temple Found in Rome

ROME, May 25 (AP).—A temple, dedicated to the Mithraic cult containing frescoes and statues has been found under the floor of one of Rome's oldest Christian churches, authorities said today.

The temple came to light when the floor caved in as workers were repairing the Church of St. Stefano Rotundo.

One statue is of marble. The other is of stucco and has an inscription. Both are painted.

'I had been tipped off that there was a young trumpet player who would ask to sit in with the band. Sure enough, this kid shows up and asks if our drummer would "play time" behind him... it was my first meeting with Bix Beiderbecke.'



Songwriter Jule Styne—Still at Bat

By Henry Pleasants

LONDON (IHT).—Supervising orchestra rehearsals for the West End opening of "Gypsy" on Tuesday, Jule Styne is totally engaged with the present. Relaxing in his hotel room afterwards, he exercises an elderly gentleman's prerogative of a backward look.

Not many songwriters have more to look back upon: nearly 1,000 songs; 24 hit musicals in 26 years, among them "Gypsy," "High Button Shoes," "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "Bells Are Ringing," "Funny Girl" and "Arturo Ui"; nearly as many film and TV scores, and an Oscar for the title song of "Three Coins in a Fountain."

In London, possibly because he was born here, 67 years ago, he has been looking further back than that, to his early experiences as a jazz pianist in Chicago in the mid-twenties; beyond that to his studies as a classical pianist, and beyond that to his early childhood in the Bethnal Green area of London's East End. His name in those days was Jules Stein, and it was a question about how he arrived at the present variant that started him off on early jazz in Chicago, where the family emigrated when he was eight.

"It all came about because of my booking agent," he recalled. "His name was Jules Stein, same as mine. There was a lot of confusion, so he suggested that I change mine to Dick Ford. I had no objection to Dick Ford, but then I thought of my mother. If I made a name for myself as Dick Ford, she would never be able to persuade her friends and neighbors that Dick Ford was really her boy Jules. So I changed the spelling to Styne, and dropped the 's' of Jules, since Jules Styne, or Stein, for that matter, gives you too many 's'es. Then I decided that pronouncing the final 'e' gave the name a nice lilt, so it has been pronounced Julie ever since.

"How did I become a jazz pianist in the first place? It was on account of a party. I was a child prodigy, going from scholarship to scholarship, playing Haydn, Mozart and all. One evening at a kids' gathering there was a boy playing popular tunes for dancing, and he was the center of attention. I sat down and played some Chopin. Didn't get a tumble. So, next day I went to Elter & Kogan's music store and bought an armload of sheet music. From that time on, I was the life of the party.

"A year or so later, I was on the road with Jules Kerwin and his Benson Blue Jackets. We were booked into a town in Iowa, and I had been tipped off that there was a young trumpet player there who would ask to sit in with the band. Sure enough, this kid shows up and asks if our drummer would 'play time' behind him. It was the first time I ever heard the term 'play time.' It was also my first meeting with Bix Beiderbecke.

"I persuaded Bix to come to Chicago. We played the clubs, schools and theaters. Among the young fellows we played with were Frankie Trumbauer, Frank Teschemacher, Charley Spivack, Wingy Manone, Benny and Harry Goodman, Jack Teagarden, Ben Pollack and Glenn Miller."

To Hollywood

"They all went on to jazz fame. I went on to Hollywood as a vocal coach at 20th Century-Fox. I had already had a couple of song hits: 'Sunday' and 'Little Jo,' but I didn't write another song for 14 years, between the ages of 20 and 34. Instead, I was coaching Alice Faye and Shirley Temple and Tony Martin and many more.

"Finally, Darryl Zanuck lent me to Republic, and from then on I did scores for Westerns and loads of songs, including 'Purple Sage in the Twilight' for Gene Autry. Then came Broadway and the big time. I've had a lot of at-bats, and my average is high."

I asked Jule Styne what distinguishes the songs of today's younger writers from those of his own generation.

"The difference," he replied, "is that we had to keep dancing in mind. A tune had to be danceable. The kids today are listening. This has given the young songwriters a lot of latitude. They don't have to think in terms of a symmetrical layout of eight-measure phrases. They can also ignore traditional conventions of key relationships. They don't even have to end a song in the key in which they began.

"They're not craftsmen in the sense that we were, but it hasn't prevented the best of them—Paul McCartney, Burt Bacharach and Jim Webb, for example—from writing some fine songs. It may even have helped them."

Jule Styne is not ready to abandon the field to the young. He is back in the United States by now, doing the score for a new film musical version of "Treasure Island." And there are other projects. He may be pushing 70, but, as the Styne song has it, "Everything's Coming Up Roses!"

PEOPLE: Celebrated Ex-Madam Sells Her Antiques

An auction at "the little house on Clay Street" in Bowling Green, Ky.—a house that was never a home—has brought antique buyers from as far away as New York City and Fresno, Calif., to bid on such items as a red satin lamp ($500) and a Tiffany toothpick holder ($175). Pauline Tabor Webster, ex-proprietor of the best-known bordello east of the Rockies, has been auctioning off 300 of her celebrated period pieces in a three-day sale that began on Thursday. "It's killing me, but what can you do?" said Mrs. Webster, who is 68 and a widow. Pauline's place, which she opened in 1944, was closed down five years ago to make way for an urban renewal project. She said the sale was necessary because she has no room to store her collection of antique furniture, cut glass and china. Applauded by a crowd of potential customers as she entered the auction tent and took a front-row seat, Mrs. Webster explained that she had decided on a $10 admission fee not because she needed the money but to keep away the riffraff.

Those well-to-do dogs in Deerfield Beach, Fla., are still going strong, five years after they inherited a fortune from the late Eleanor Richey, and Auburn University is beginning to strain at the leash. When Miss Richey died in 1968 she left her estate to 150 strays she had collected over a 15-year period. Four relatives contested the will and in 1972 a court awarded each of them 5 percent of the estate, with the rest reserved for the dogs. After the last dog dies—or at the latest in 20 years—the money goes to Auburn University for veterinary research. By 1972 the estate had increased to more than $14 million—and Dr. I.C. Frederickson, the veterinarian who takes care of them, has now estimated that some of the dogs could live another 12 years.

There are 74, and the youngest is 5 years old. Last winter a basset hound in the group died at 18. The dogs own a 180-acre ranch near Fort Lauderdale, where the upkeep costs run to about $17,000 a year.
